"On a number of occasions theretofore Italy gave Austria to understand in friendly but clear terms that the independence of Serbia was considered as essential to Balkan equilibrium. Austria-Hungary was further advised that Italy could never permit that equilibrium to be disturbed to her prejudice. This warning had been conveyed not only by her diplomats in private conversations with responsible Austro-Hungarian officials, but was proclaimed publicly by Italian statesmen on the floors of parliament.

"Therefore when Austria-Hungary ignored the usual practices and menaced Serbia by sending her an ultimatum without in any way notifying the Italian government, leaving her learn of her action through the press rather than through the usual channels of diplomacy, when Austria-Hungary took this unprecedented course she not only severed her alliance with Italy but committed an act inimical to Italy's interests.

"The Italian government had obtained trustworthy information that the complete program laid down by Austria-Hungary with reference to the Balkans was prompted by a desire to decrease Italy's economical and political influence in that section, and tended directly and indirectly to the subservience of Serbia to Austria-Hungary, the political and territorial isolation of Montenegro, and the isolation and political decadence of Roumania.

"This attempted diminution of the influence of Italy in the Balkans would have been brought about by the Austro-Hungarian program, even though Austria-Hungary had no intention of making further territorial acquisitions. Furthermore, attention should be called to the fact that the Austro-Hungarian government had assumed the solemn obligation of prior consultation of Italy as required by the special provisions of Article VII. of the treaty of the triple alliance, which, in addition to the obligation of previous agreements, recognized the right of compensation to the other contracting parties in case one should occupy temporarily or permanently any section of the Balkans.

"To this end, the Italian government approached the Austro-Hungarian government immediately upon the inauguration of Austro-Hungarian hostilities against Serbia and succeeded in obtaining reluctant acquiescence in the Italian representations. Conversations were initiated immediately after July 23, for the purpose of giving a new lease of life to the treaty which had been violated and thereby annulled by the act of Austria-Hungary.

"This object could be attained only by the conclusion of new agreements. The conversations were renewed with additional propositions as the basis in December, 1914. The Italian ambassador at Vienna at that time received instructions to inform Count Berchtold, the Austro-Hungarian minister of foreign affairs, that the Italian government considered it necessary to proceed without delay to an exchange of views and consequently to concrete negotiations with the Austro-Hungarian government concerning the complex situation arising out of the conflict which that government had provoked.

"Count Berchtold at first refused. He declared that the time had not arrived for negotiations.

Subsequently, upon our rejoinder, in which the German government united, Count Berchtold agreed to exchange views as suggested. We promptly declared, as one of our fundamental objects, that the compensation on which the agreement should be based should relate to territories at the time under the dominion of Austria-Hungary.

The discussion continued for months, from the first days of December to March, and it was not until the end of March that Baron Burian offered a zone of territory comprised within a line extending from the existing boundary to a point just north of the city of Trent.

"In exchange for this proposed cession the Austro-Hungarian government demanded a number of pledges, including among them an assurance of entire liberty of action in the Balkans. Note should be made of the fact that the cession of the territory around Trent was not intended to be immediately effective, as we demanded, but was to be made only upon the termination of the European war. We replied that the offer was not acceptable, and then presented the minimum concessions which could meet in part our national aspirations and strengthen in an equitable manner our strategic position in the Adriatic.

"These demands comprised: The extension of the boundary in Trentino, a new boundary on the Isonzo, special provision for Trieste, the cession of certain islands of the Curzolari archipelago, the abandonment of Austrian claims in Albania and the recognition of our possession of Avlona and the islands of the Aegean sea, which we occupied during our war with Turkey.

"At first our demands were categorically rejected. It was not until another month of conversation that Austria-Hungary was induced to increase the zone of territory she was prepared to cede in the Trentino and then only as far as Mezzo Lombardo, thereby excluding the territory inhabited by people of the Italian race, such as the Valle del Noce, Val di Fasso and Val di Ampezzo. Such a proposal would have given to Italy a boundary of no strategical value. In addition the Austro-Hungarian government maintained its determination not to make the cession effective before the end of the war.

"The repeated refusals of Austria-Hungary were expressly confirmed in a conversation between Baron Burian and the Italian ambassador at Vienna on April 29. While admitting the possibility of recognizing some of our interests in Avlona and granting the above mentioned territorial cession in the Trentino, the Austro-Hungarian government persisted in its opposition to all our other demands, especially those regarding the boundary of the Isonzo, Trieste and the islands.

"The attitude assumed by Austria-Hungary from the beginning of December until the end of April made it evident that she was attempting to temporize without coming to a conclusion. Under such circumstances Italy was confronted by the danger of losing forever the opportunity of realizing her aspirations based upon tradition, nationality, and her desire for a safe position in the Adriatic, while other contingencies in the European conflict menaced her principal interest in other seas.

"Hence, Italy faced the necessity and duty of recovering that liberty of action to which she was entitled and of seeking protection for her interests, apart from the negotiations which had been dragging uselessly along for five months and without reference to the treaty of alliance which had virtually failed as a result of its annulment by the action of Austria-Hungary in July, 1914.

"It would not be out of place to observe that the alliance having terminated and there existing no longer any reason for the Italian people to be bound by it, though they had loyally stood by it for so many years because of their desire for peace, there naturally revived in the public mind the grievances against Austria-Hungary which for so many years had been voluntarily repressed.

"While the treaty of alliance contained no formal agreement for the use of the Italian language or the maintenance of Italian tradition and Italian civilization in the Italian provinces of Austria, nevertheless if the alliance was to be effective in preserving peace and harmony it was indisputably clear that Austria-Hungary, as our ally, should have taken into account the moral obligation of respecting what constituted some of the most vital interests of Italy.

"Instead, the constant policy of the Austro-Hungarian government was to destroy Italian nationality and Italian civilization all along the coast of the Adriatic. A brief statement of the facts and of the tendencies well known to all will suffice.

"Substitution of officials of the Italian race by officials of other nationalities; artificial immigration of hundreds of families of a different nationality; replacement of Italian by other labor; exclusion from Trieste by the decree of Prince Hohenlohe of employees who were subjects of Italy; denationalization of the judicial administration; refusal of Austria to permit an Italian university in Trieste, which formed the subject of diplomatic negotiations; denationalization of navigation companies; encouragement of other nationalities to the detriment of the Italian and finally the methodical and unjustifiable expulsion of Italians in ever-increasing numbers.

"This deliberate and persistent policy of the Austro-Hungarian government with reference to the Italian population was not only due to internal conditions brought about by the competition of the different nationalities within its territory, but was inspired in great part by a deep sentiment of hostility and aversion toward Italy, which prevailed particularly in the quarters closest to the Austro-Hungarian government and influenced decisively its course of action.

"Of the many instances which could be cited it is enough to say that in 1911, while Italy was engaged in war with Turkey, the Austro-Hungarian general staff prepared a campaign against us and the military party prosecuted energetically a political intrigue designed to drag in other responsible elements of Austria. The mobilization of an army upon our frontier left us in no doubt of our neighbor's sentiment and intentions.

"The crisis was settled peacefully through the influence, so far as known, of outside factors; but since that time we have been constantly under apprehension of a sudden attack whenever the party opposed to us should get the upper hand in Vienna. All of this was known in Italy, and it was only the sincere desire for peace prevailing among the Italian people which prevented a rupture.

"After the European war broke out Italy sought to come to an understanding with Austria-Hungary with a view to a settlement satisfactory to both parties which might avert existing and future trouble. Her efforts were in vain, notwithstanding the efforts of Germany, which for months endeavored to induce Austria-Hungary to comply with Italy's suggestions, thereby recognizing the propriety and legitimacy of the Italian attitude. Therefore, Italy found herself compelled by the force of events to seek other solutions.

"Inasmuch as the treaty of alliance with Austria-Hungary had ceased virtually to exist and served only to prolong a state of continual friction and mutual suspicion, the Italian ambassador at Vienna was instructed to declare to the Austro-Hungarian government that the Italian government considered itself free from the ties arising out of the treaty of the triple alliance in so far as Austria-Hungary was concerned. This communication was delivered in Vienna on May 4.

"Subsequently to this declaration, and after we had been obliged to take steps for the protection of our interests, the Austro-Hungarian government submitted new concessions, which, however, were deemed insufficient and by no means met our minimum demands. These offers could not be considered under the circumstances.

"The Italian government, taking into consideration what has been stated above, and supported by the vote of parliament and the solemn manifestation of the country, came to the decision that any further delay would be inadvisable. Therefore, on this day (May 23d), it was declared at Rome that beginning to-morrow, May 24, it will consider itself in a state of war with Austria-Hungary. Orders to this effect were telegraphed yesterday to the Italian ambassador at Vienna."

MINIMUM DEMANDS IN DETAIL.

It may be added that the minimum demands made upon Austria-Hungary on behalf of Italy were, more specifically, as follows:

1. Cession of the entire province of Trent (part of the Austrian Tyrol), according to the frontier of the kingdom of Italy in 1811.

2. Cession of Eastern Friuli, including Malborgeth, Plezzo, Tolmino, Gradisca, Goritz, Monfalcone and Gomen and as far south as Nabresina.

3. Trieste, Capo d'Istria and Pirano (the last two in Istria) to form a new state independent from Austria.

4. The islands of Gurezola, Lissa, Lesina, Lagosta, Cazza and Melada (off the coast of lower Dalmatia) to be ceded to Italy.

5. Abandonment by Austria of her interests in Albania, acknowledging Italian sovereignty over Avlona.

CONCESSIONS OFFERED BY AUSTRIA.

Speaking in the German reichstag May 18, Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg made a speech in which he outlined the concessions which Austria-Hungary had offered to make to Italy as follows:

1. Part of the Tyrol inhabited by Italians was to be ceded to Italy.

2. The western bank of the Isonzo, in so far as the population was purely Italian, and the town of Gradisca likewise was to be ceded to Italy.

3. Trieste was to be made an imperial free city, receiving an administration which would insure the Italian character of the city and to have an Italian university.

4. Italian sovereignty over Avlona (a seaport of Albania) and a sphere of interest belonging thereto to be recognized.

5. Austria-Hungary declared her political disinterestedness regarding Albania.

6. The national interests of Italians in Austria to be particularly respected.

7. Austria-Hungary to grant amnesty to political military prisoners belonging to the ceded territory.

8. The further wishes of Italy regarding the general question to be assured every consideration.

9. Austria-Hungary, after the conclusion of the agreement, to give a solemn declaration concerning the concessions.

10. Mixed committees for the regulation of the details of the concessions to be appointed.

11. After the conclusion of the agreement, Austro-Hungarian soldiers, natives of the occupied territories, shall not further participate in the war.

"I can add," said the imperial chancellor, "that Germany, in order further to strengthen the understanding between both her allies, undertook, with the full agreement of the Vienna cabinet, to give a full guaranty for the loyal fulfillment of these offers."

EVENTS BEFORE INTERVENTION.

Italy's intervention in the war on the side of the allies was foreshadowed almost from the time when hostilities began in August, 1914. The alliance with Germany and Austria-Hungary had never been popular on account of the antipathy which had existed between Italy and Austria. The situation, which had seemed to make it advisable when it was entered into in 1884, had changed completely, for Italy no longer feared France. The government in Rome had, in fact, assured the republic that in no case could it become either the instrument or the auxiliary of aggression against France. With Britain Italy had always maintained good relations, while the understanding reached as to all Mediterranean and African questions concerning France, Britain and Italy served to make the unwritten alliance between them more effective than the formal alliance with Germany and Austria-Hungary. This was well understood in Berlin and Vienna, where the best that was hoped for was that Italy might be induced to preserve an attitude of friendly neutrality toward the central empires. Had the Austrian authorities adopted a less unyielding attitude and refrained from resorting to what Prince von Buelow afterward described as a "policy of pin-pricks," Italy, in the opinion of some observers, might have been content with playing the role of a neutral.

The forces tending to keep Italy neutral were neither many nor strong. There was a sentiment in some quarters that the country should remain "loyal" to its old allies even if the pact between them was a one-sided affair and which, as affirmed in the statement quoted above, had been broken by Austria-Hungary's attack on Serbia. This was an idea advocated chiefly by the German or pro-German residents of Italy, who had large business interests which would be disastrously affected in case of war. Neutrality was also urged by Sig. Giovanni Giolitti, a former premier and a man of undoubted ability and influence, who had always manifested a strong friendship for Germany. His adherents in and out of parliament were active in their opposition to all warlike moves. The socialists and some of the labor leaders were also averse to war as a matter of principle. There were also some Italians who thought the Germans and Austrians would win in the European war and that if Italy was not with them it should at least not be against them; they believed it to be unwise to take any risk at all if it could be avoided. It was also charged that Germany and Austria had many paid agents in Italy who were constantly at work to counteract the war sentiment by means of bribery and threats of various kinds.

On the other hand, the forces driving Italy into war were many and, as it appeared when the crisis came, irresistible. First, it was felt and frequently expressed in public speeches and the newspapers, that the allies were fighting for a just cause; that in this war they were representing democracy and liberty as opposed to militarism and autocracy, and that a victory for the central European empires would not be for the best interests of civilization as a whole. Italians generally did not believe that Austria was justified in making war on Serbia or that the European conflagration was unavoidable.

ITALY RENOUNCES TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

Italy renounced its alliance with Austria-Hungary and Germany May 4 in a note sent by Foreign Minister Sonnino to the duke of Avarna, Italian ambassador in Vienna, and handed by him to Baron Burian, the Austrian foreign minister. The note closed with the following statement:

"All efforts of the Italian government encounter the resistance of the imperial Austrian government, which after several months decided to concede only the special interests of Italy in Avlona and to promise insufficient concession of territory in Trent—a concession which admits of no normal solution of the situation from an ethical, political or military point of view. This concession, moreover, would not be accomplished except at an undetermined period; that is to say, only at the end of the war.

"In view of this condition of affairs the Italian government must renounce the hope of reaching an agreement and sees itself constrained to withdraw all propositions of settlement. It is equally useless to give a formal appearance to an alliance which would be destined only to dissimulate a reality of continued mistrust and daily disagreements. That is why Italy, confident in its right, affirms and proclaims it will resume from now on its entire liberty of action and declares null and hereafter without effect its treaty with Austria-Hungary."

May 23 Italy joined the triple entente on equal terms, thereby making it a quadruple entente.

ACTION BY PARLIAMENT.

The Italian parliament reconvened May 20 and at once proceeded to carry out the policy adopted by the cabinet. Premier Salandra, on rising in the chamber of deputies to present the government's bill granting full powers to the government, was given an ovation. By its ultimatum to Serbia, the premier said, Austria had annulled the equilibrium of the Balkans and prejudiced Italian interests there. Notwithstanding this violation of the triple alliance, Italy had endeavored for months to avoid a conflict, but these efforts were bound to have a limit in time and dignity and that was why, the speaker said, the government was compelled to present its denunciation of the triple alliance May 4, and, lest Italy be left isolated, had provided for the safeguarding of her own interests.

The bill presented by the premier, and passed by a vote of 407 to 74, was as follows:

"The government is authorized in case of war and during the duration of war to make decisions, with due authority of law, in every respect required for the defense of the state, the guaranty of public order and urgent economic national necessities. The provisions contained in articles 243 to 251 of the military code continue in force. The government is authorized also to have recourse until Dec. 31, 1915, to monthly provisional appropriations for balancing the budget. This law shall come into force the day it is passed."

Those who voted against the bill were socialists and some of the adherents of the former premier, Sig. Giolitti. The bill was passed by the senate May 21 by a vote of 262 to 2 and was signed by King Victor Emmanuel on the following day.

DECLARATION OF WAR.

On the afternoon of May 23 the Italian ambassador to Austria, the duke of Avarna, presented to Baron von Burian, the Austro-Hungarian minister of foreign affairs, the following formal declaration:

"Vienna, May 23, 1915.—Conformably with the orders of his majesty the king, his august sovereign, the undersigned ambassador of Italy has the honor to deliver to his excellency the foreign minister of Austria-Hungary the following communication:

"Declaration has been made, as from the 4th of this month, to the imperial and royal government of grave motives for which Italy, confident in her good right, proclaimed annulled and henceforth without effect her treaty of alliance with Austria-Hungary, which was violated by the imperial and royal government, and resumed her liberty of action in this respect.

"The government of the king, firmly resolved to provide by all means at its disposal for safeguarding Italian rights and interests, cannot fail in its duty to take against every existing and future menace measures which events impose upon it for the fulfillment of national aspirations.

"His majesty the king declares that he considers himself from to-morrow in a state of war with Austria-Hungary.

"The undersigned has the honor to make known at the same time to his excellency the foreign minister that passports will be placed this very day at the disposal of the imperial and royal ambassador at Rome and he will be obliged to his excellency if he will kindly have his passports handed to him. AVARNA."

The declaration of war was handed to the Austro-Hungarian ambassador in Rome, Baron Macchio, at the same time as it was delivered in Vienna. The ambassador demanded and received his passports.

On the same day (May 23) the following official declaration was made by the German government in Berlin:

"The Italian government to-day caused to be declared, through the ambassador to the Austro-Hungarian government, the duke of Avarna, that Italy considers itself in a state of war with Austria-Hungary.

"The Italian government, by this inexcusable attack against the dual monarchy, has also broken, without right or without ground, its alliance with Germany.

"The loyal relationship existing, conformably with the treaty between Austria-Hungary and the German empire, and still more firmly welded by the comradeship in arms, has remained unimpaired by the defection of the third ally and his desertion to the enemies' camp. The German ambassador, therefore, has received instructions to leave Rome conjointly with the Austro-Hungarian ambassador."

ITALY AND ALBANIA.

Italy sent troops to Avlona and took possession of the Albanian seaport Dec. 25, 1914. It justified this action by declaring that in accordance with the agreement of the London conference it had determined to oppose the slightest attempt to infringe upon the territorial integrity, independence or neutrality of Albania and it would not permit a change of government there nor allow the inhabitants to take part in the war. It was further intimated that some of the signatories to the London agreement had aided in the Albanian revolution for the purpose of making an attack on Serbia. Italy, it was announced, was determined to protect its interests in the Adriatic, and would preserve order in all the towns along the coast. Early in December it was reported that Italy had landed more troops on Albanian soil for the purpose of aiding the Serbians after their decisive defeat by the Austrians, Germans and Bulgarians.

BULGARIA MAKES WAR ON ALLIES.

Bulgaria, which for months had declared that it would maintain strict neutrality toward all the belligerents, declared war on Serbia Oct. 13, 1915, and at once, in co-operation with Germany and Austria-Hungary, proceeded to take revenge upon the nation which after the Balkan-Turkish war had retained for itself that part of Macedonia which the Sofia government had set its heart upon possessing. The result of the one-sided conflict is told elsewhere.

Interpreted in the light of after events the course taken by Bulgaria was planned long months before and King Ferdinand and Premier Radoslavoff only waited the proper moment for taking action. In the first place Bulgaria obtained in 1914 a large loan from Germany to troops by its neighbors Bulgaria is forced to declare armed neutrality."

It became known and was announced by Sir Edward Grey in London, Oct. 1, that German and Austrian officers had been arriving in Bulgaria with a view to taking an active part in directing the Bulgarian army. "This action," he said, "is precisely similar to that taken in Turkey, where German officers forced Turkey to make an entirely unprovoked attack upon Russia last year." Oct. 4 the Russian minister at Sofia was ordered to present the following ultimatum to M. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian premier:

"The events which are taking place in Bulgaria at this moment give evidence of a definite decision of King Ferdinand's government to place the fate of its country in the hands of Germany."

"The presence of German and Austrian officers at the ministry of war and on the staff of the army, the concentration of troops in the zone bordering Serbia and the extensive financial support accepted from our enemies by the Sofia cabinet no longer leave any doubt as to the object of the military preparations of Bulgaria."

"The powers of the entente, who have at heart the realization of the aspirations of the Bulgarian people, have on many occasions warned M. Radoslavoff that any hostile act against Serbia would be considered as directed against themselves. The assurances given by the head of the Bulgarian cabinet in reply to these warnings are contradicted by the facts."

"The Russian minister, therefore, has received orders to leave Bulgaria with all the staffs of the legation and consulates if the Bulgarian gov-be paid in installments. Then Turkey, threatened by the Russians and British and influenced by its ally Germany, was found to be in a mood to make certain concessions demanded by Bulgaria. Negotiations began in March, 1915, and in August a treaty was signed by which Turkey ceded to Bulgaria certain lands and rights by which the whole of the railway from Sofia to Dedegatch came into its possession. What Bulgaria was to do in return was not made public. Premier Radoslavoff announced that the treaty carried no political obligations and that Bulgaria would continue its policy of strict neutrality.

In the meantime the diplomats representing the allies attempted to restore the old Balkan league, consisting of Serbia, Greece, Roumania and Bulgaria, but neither Serbia nor Greece would make sufficient territorial concessions to satisfy the Bulgars and the plan failed. In September Bulgaria began calling in its reserves; 40,000 Bulgarians in Macedonia and Thrace were summoned to the colors, and Sept. 21 the authorities in Sofia ordered the mobilization of all the military forces in the kingdom. Simultaneously the premier issued a statement in which he declared that the mobilization was merely for defensive purposes and that it was not a war move. "The entrance of Bulgaria into a state of armed neutrality," he said, "is explained by reason of the changes shortly to be made in the political and military situation. Bulgaria has no hostile intentions, but is firmly resolved to safeguard its interests and independence—if necessary, by force of arms. On account of the movement of ernment does not within twenty-four hours openly break with the enemies of the Slav cause and of Russia, and does not at once proceed to send away officers belonging to armies of states which are at war with the powers of the entente."

Bulgaria's reply was unsatisfactory, and Oct. 5 the Russian minister in Sofia notified M. Radoslavoff that diplomatic relations between Russia and Bulgaria were ended. The French, British, Serbian and Italian ministers likewise asked for their passports and soon thereafter left Sofia. The Germans and Austrians had by this time massed an army of 400,000 men on the Serbian frontier and were ready for the move that was to crush Serbia. The French and British had landed an expedition at Saloniki. Bulgaria felt that the time to strike had come and on Oct. 13 declared war against Serbia. Then within a few days the allies declared war on Bulgaria, and all doubts as to that country's position in the struggle were at an end. The central powers had, with the assistance of King Ferdinand, outwitted the entente diplomats and had won over Bulgaria to their side. The people of that country, who had long proclaimed their sympathy with the allies, were not pleased, but the army was loyal to the king and individuals could do nothing.

GREECE AND ROUMANIA.

Up to the first part of December, when this record of the war closed, Greece had managed to keep out of the war. As told in the article on diplomatic changes caused by the war, M. Venizelos, the friend of the allies, came back into power as premier and as such he strongly advocated giving aid to Serbia in accordance with the treaty existing between Greece and that country, and also gave his consent to a landing of allied forces on Greek soil at Saloniki. King Constantine and his followers were nominally in favor of strict neutrality, but as a matter of fact were in sympathy with the central powers. They forced Venizelos to resign the premiership and took things into their own hands. The allies in November and the early part of December made efforts to secure guarantees for the safety of their troops in Serbia in case they should have to retreat back into Greece, but with what success had not been determined when this outline of the situation was written.

In Roumania the situation was somewhat the same as in Greece. The people were strongly in favor of the allies, while the king and his friends were with the Germanic powers. Up to Dec. 4 no decision had been taken as to which side should have the support of the Roumanian army, though at that time the allies appeared to have the better chance.

FOUR NOTABLE BATTLES IN FRANCE. SOISSONS.

Four of the greatest battles in the European war were fought on the western front in 1915. The first was fought Jan. 8-13 near Soissons, France. The contest was begun by the French, who bombarded the approaches to a plateau north of the Aisne river. Under cover of the artillery fire they brought up large forces through a number of ravines notching the front of the plateau and carried part of the German positions. Gen. von Kluck gathered his forces for a counterstroke; and after a number of fierce assaults covering five days succeeded in driving the French from their trenches on the plateau and across the Aisne. The losses in the fighting were heavy on both sides. The French lost a number of cannon, including several coast defense guns. The battle, according to report, was witnessed by Emperor William, who gave decorations to the successful generals.

NEUVE CHAPELLE.

The next great encounter, which became known as the battle of Neuve Chapelle, took place between the British and Germans March 10, 11 and 12, 1915. The British took the offensive, captured more than a mile of German trenches in the vicinity of Neuve Chapelle near the line from Lille to La Bassee and advanced a mile beyond their original position. The victory was a costly one, as the following official report of the British losses in the three days' combat will show:

	Officers.	Men.
Killed	190	2,337
Wounded	359	5,174
Missing	23	1,723
Total	572	12,239
Grand total		12,811

"The enemy," said Gen. French in his report, "left several thousand dead on the field and we have positive information that upward of 12,000 wounded were removed by train. Thirty officers and 1,657 of other ranks were captured." Unofficial British estimates of the German loss placed it at 18,000. The Germans, on the other hand, placed their total casualties at only 6,000. In this battle the plan of beginning with a prolonged and extraordinarily heavy bombardment was tried and it was afterward said by David Lloyd George, the British chancellor of the exchequer, that more ammunition was used in the three days than was used in the entire Boer war, which lasted two years and nine months.

YPRES.

In the battle of the Ypres, lasting from April 23 to April 28, 1915, the Germans drove the British and French back for a distance of about five miles. They forced their way across the Ypres canal at Steenstraete and Het Sas and took some 1,600 prisoners with about thirty cannon. It was in this sanguinary battle that the Germans first used asphyxiating gases on a large scale and their success was due in part to the surprise which this mode of attack caused among the allies. Many Canadians in the British army lost their lives on this occasion. What the total casualties in the battle were was not made known, but losses were heavy on both sides.

THE CHAMPAGNE.

The fourth and greatest battle was that commonly called the battle of Champagne. It was begun by the French and British with what was probably the most tremendous bombardment with heavy guns in the history of the world. It lasted for more than a week and increased in intensity until Sept. 25 when the British attacked the enemy south of La Bassee canal to the east of Grenay and Vermelles and captured his trenches on a front of more than five miles, penetrating his lines in some places to a distance of 4,000 yards. They took the western outskirts of Hulluch, the village of Loos and Hill 70 and also gained some ground near Hooze. The French at the same time in the Champagne district took a network of German trenches from Auberville to Ville-sur-Taube, forcing the enemy to fall back one and a half to two and a half miles. North of Arras the village of Souchez was captured, the last trench of the Germans east of the "labyrinth" was taken and the earthworks near Neuville St. Vaast were occupied. It was claimed by the British, French and Belgians that on the 25th and 26th they took twenty miles of trenches, six towns, 23,000 prisoners and thirty-four guns. The losses in killed and wounded on both sides were extremely heavy, but no reliable figures were made public. The fighting continued with diminishing intensity for nearly a week, the allies retaining most of the ground they had taken.

LEADING NAVAL EVENTS OF THE WAR.

BATTLE AT FALKLAND ISLANDS.

Exact details of what occurred at the naval engagement of the Falkland islands in the south Atlantic Dec. 8, 1914, were given in the official dispatch of Vice-Admiral Sir F. C. Doveton-Sturdee to the British admiralty, made public March 3, 1915. The vice-admiral was in command of a squadron consisting of the following ships: Battle cruisers Invincible (flagship) and Inflexible; armored cruisers Carnarvon, Cornwall and Kent; second class cruisers Glasgow and Bristol and the light cruiser Macedonia. These ships had arrived at Port Stanley Dec. 7 and had begun coaling at once so as to resume the search for the German squadron which had sunk the cruisers Monmouth and Good Hope in the Pacific Nov. 1. An old battle ship, the Canopus, was also at Port Stanley. At 8 a. m. on Tuesday, Dec. 8, it was announced from the signal station on shore that two warships were in sight steering northward. They were coming from the direction of the Straits of Magellan and approaching Port Stanley, which is on the east side of East Falkland island.

Orders were at once issued to the Kent, which was serving as guardship, to weigh anchor and for the other vessels to get up steam for full speed. At this time the Kent, Invincible, Infexible, Carnarvon and Cornwall were in Port William or just outside the inner harbor of Port Stanley, in which the Glasgow and Bristol were anchored. Reports were received from the signal station of other ships coming up from the south. At 9:20 a. m. the two leading ships of the enemy, the Gneisenau and Nurnberg, with guns trained on the wireless station, came within range of the Canopus, which opened fire at them across the lowland at a range of 11,000 yards. The enemy ships at once hoisted their colors and turned away. At this time the masts and smoke of the enemy were visible from the upper bridge of the Invincible at a range of approximately 17,000 yards across the lowland to the south of Port William. What followed may be told in the words of Vice-Admiral Doveton-Sturdee's dispatch:

"A few moments later the two cruisers altered course to port, as though to close with the Kent at the entrance to the harbor, but about this time it seems that the Invincible and Infexible were seen over the land, as the enemy at once altered course and increased speed to join their consorts. The Glasgow weighed and proceeded at 9:40 a. m. to join the Kent and observe the enemy's movements. At 9:45 a. m. the squadron—less the Bristol—weighed and proceeded out of the harbor in the following order: Carnarvon, Infexible, Invincible and Cornwall. On passing Cape Pembroke light the five ships of the enemy appeared clearly in sight to the southeast, hull down. The visibility was at its maximum, the sea was calm, with a bright sun, a clear sky and a light breeze from the northwest.

SIR F. C. DOVETON-STURDEE,
Vice-Admiral, British Navy.

"At 10:20 a. m. the signal for a general chase was made. The battle cruisers quickly passed ahead of the Carnarvon and overtook the Kent. The Glasgow was ordered to keep two miles from the Invincible and the Infexible was stationed on the starboard quarter of the flagship. Speed was eased to twenty knots at 11:15 a. m. to enable the other cruisers to get into station. At this time the enemy's funnels and bridges showed just above the horizon.

"The enemy were still maintaining their distance and I decided, at 12:30 p. m., to attack with the two battle cruisers and the Glasgow. At 12:47 p. m. the signal to 'open fire and engage the enemy' was made. The Infexible opened fire at 12:55 p. m., from her fore turret at the right hand ship of the enemy, a light cruiser; a few minutes later the Invincible opened fire at the same ship.

"The deliberate fire from a range of 16,500 to 15,000 yards at the right hand light cruiser, which was dropping astern, became too threatening and when a shell fell close alongside her at 1:20 p. m. she (the Leipzig) turned away with the Nurnberg and Dresden to the southwest. The light cruisers were at once followed by the Kent, Glasgow and Cornwall in accordance with my instructions. The action finally developed into three separate encounters, besides the subsidiary one dealing with the threatened landing.

ACTION WITH ARMORED CRUISERS.

"The fire of the battle cruisers was directed on the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau. The effect of this was quickly seen, when at 1:25 p. m., with the Scharnhorst leading, they turned about seven points to port in succession into line ahead and opened fire at 1:30 p. m. Shortly afterward speed was eased to twenty-four knots, and the battle cruisers were ordered to turn together, bringing them into line ahead, with the Invincible leading. The range was about 13,500 yards at the final turn, and increased until, at 2 p. m. it had reached 16,450 yards.

"The enemy then (2:10 p. m.) turned away about ten points to starboard and a second chase ensued until, at 2:45 p. m. the battle cruisers again opened fire; this caused the enemy, at 2:53 p. m., to turn into line ahead to port and open fire at 2:55 p. m. The Scharnhorst caught fire forward, but not seriously, and her fire slackened perceptibly; the Gneisenau was badly hit by the Infexible.

"At 3:30 p. m. the Scharnhorst led round about ten points to starboard; just previously her fire had slackened perceptibly and one shell had shot away her third funnel; some guns were not firing and it would appear that the turn was dictated by a desire to bring her starboard guns into action. The effect of the fire on the Scharnhorst became more and more apparent in consequence of smoke from fires, and also escaping steam; at times a shell would cause a large hole to appear in her side, through which could be seen a dull red glow of flame. At 4:04 p. m. the Scharnhorst, whose flag remained flying to the last, suddenly listed heavily to port and within a minute it became clear that she was a doomed ship; for the list increased very rapidly until she lay on her beam ends and at 4:17 p. m. she disappeared.

"The Gneisenau passed on the far side of her late flagship and continued a determined but ineffectual effort to fight the two battle cruisers. At 5:08 p. m. the forward funnel was knocked over and remained resting against the second funnel. She was evidently in very serious straits and her fire slackened very much. At 5:15 p. m. one of the Gneisenau's shells struck the Invincible; this was her last effective effort. At 5:30 p. m. she turned toward the flagship (British) with a heavy list to starboard and appeared stopped, with steam pouring from her escape pipes and smoke from shell and fires rising everywhere. About this time I ordered the signal 'cease fire,' but before it was hoisted the Gneisenau opened fire again and continued to fire from time to time with a single gun. At 5:49 p. m. the three ships closed in on the Gneisenau and at this time, the flag flying at her fore truck was apparently hauled down, but the flag at the peak continued flying. At 5:50 p. m. 'cease fire' was made. At 6 p. m. the Gneisenau heeled over very suddenly, showing the men gathered on her decks and then walking on her side as she lay for a minute on her beam ends before sinking.

"The prisoners of war from the Gneisenau report that by the time the ammunition was expended some 600 men had been killed or wounded. The surviving officers and men were all ordered on deck and told to provide themselves with hammocks and any articles that could support them in the water. When the ship capsize and sank there were probably some 200 wounded survivors in the water, but owing to the shock of the cold water many were drowned within sight of the boats and ship. Every effort was made to save life as quickly as possible, both by boats and from the ships; life buoys were thrown and ropes lowered, but only a proportion could be rescued. The Invincible alone rescued 108 men, fourteen of whom were found to be dead after being brought on board. These men were buried at sea the following day with full military honors.

ACTION WITH LIGHT CRUISERS.

"At about 1 p. m., when the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau turned to port to engage the Invincible and Infexible, the enemy's light cruisers turned to starboard to escape; the Dresden was leading and the Nurnberg and Leipzig followed on each quarter. In accordance with my instructions the Glasgow, Kent and Cornwall at once went in chase of these ships. The Glasgow drew well ahead of the Cornwall and Kent and at 3 p. m. shots were exchanged with the Leipzig at 12,000 yards. The Glasgow's object was to endeavor to outrange the Leipzig with her six-inch guns and thus cause her to alter course and give the Cornwall and Kent a chance of coming into action.

"At 4:17 p. m. the Cornwall opened fire also on the Leipzig. At 7:17 p. m. the Leipzig was on fire fore and aft and the Cornwall and Glasgow ceased fire. The Leipzig turned over on her port side and disappeared at 9 p. m. Seven officers and eleven men were saved.

"At 3:36 the Cornwall ordered the Kent to engage the Nurnberg, the nearest cruiser to her. Owing to the excellent and strenuous efforts of the engine room department, the Kent was able to get within range of the Nurnberg at 5 p. m. At 6:35 the Nurnberg was on fire forward and ceased firing. The Kent also ceased firing and closed to 3,300 yards; as the colors were still observed to be flying on the Nurnberg, the Kent opened fire again. Fire was finally stopped five minutes later on the colors being hauled down, and every preparation was made to save life. The Nurnberg sank at 7:27 p. m., and as she sank a group of men were waving a German ensign attached to a staff. Twelve men were rescued, but only seven survived. The Kent had four killed and twelve wounded, mostly caused by one shell.

"During the time the three cruisers were engaged with the Nurnberg and Leipzig, the Dresden, which was beyond her consorts, effected her escape owing to her superior speed. The Glasgow was the only cruiser with sufficient speed to have had any chance of success. However, she was fully employed in engaging the Leipzig before either the Cornwall or Kent could come up and get within range. During this time the Dresden was able to increase her distance and get out of sight.

"The weather changed after 4 p. m., and the visibility was much reduced; further, the sky was overcast and cloudy, thus assisting the Dresden to get away unobserved."

TRANSPORTS SUNK.

A report was received at 11:27 a. m. from the Bristol that three ships of the enemy, probably colliers or transports, had appeared off Port Pleasant. The Bristol was ordered to take the Macedonia along and destroy the transports. Only two steamships, the Baden and Santa Isabel, were found and both were sunk after the crews had been taken off.

The total loss of the Germans in the day's battle was about 2,000 men.

BATTLE OF HELGOLAND BIGHT.

The first notable engagement between British and German naval forces in 1915 occurred on Sunday, Jan. 24, 1915, in the North sea about 140 miles northwest of Helgoland. The result was the sinking of the German armored cruiser Bluecher and the disabling of several ships on both sides. The official account of the engagement given out in Berlin on the following day was as follows:

"During the advance of our armored cruisers Seydlitz, Derfflinger, Moltke and Bluecher, which, accompanied by four smaller cruisers and two flotillas of torpedo boats, were steaming in the North sea, these vessels became engaged with a British detachment composed of five battle cruisers, several smaller cruisers and twenty-six torpedo boat destroyers. The enemy discontinued the engagement after three hours at a point seventy miles northwest of Helgoland and retreated. According to the information available, one British battle cruiser and one of our armored cruisers, the Bluecher, were sunk. All the other German ships returned to port."

Later German reports insisted that one British battle cruiser and two British destroyers were sunk. It was asserted that this had been seen not only by observers on the German fleet but by men on a dirigible, which hovered over the fighting zone. This was denied by the British admiralty, who, on the contrary, announced that in addition to sinking the Bluecher the British squadron seriously damaged two other German battle cruisers, and that according to reports made by prisoners the German third class cruiser Kolberg had been sunk.

Following is the substance of the official dispatch sent by Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty, commanding the 1st battle cruiser squadron, to the British admiralty Feb. 2, reporting the action:

"I have the honor to report that at daybreak on Jan. 24, 1915, the following vessels were cruising in company: The battle cruisers Lion, flying my flag; Princess Royal, Tiger, New Zealand and Indomitable; the light cruisers Southampton, Nottingham, Birmingham, Lowestoft, Arethusa, Aurora and Undaunted. The Arethusa and the destroyer flotillas were ahead.

"At 7:25 a. m. the flash of guns was observed south by southeast. Shortly afterward a report reached me from the Aurora that she was engaged with one of the enemy's ships. I immediately altered course to south by southeast, increased the speed to twenty-two knots and ordered the light cruisers and flotillas to chase, get in touch and report the movements of the enemy. This order was acted upon with great promptness; indeed, my wishes had already been forestalled by the respective senior officers, and reports followed almost immediately from the Southampton, Arethusa and Aurora as to the position and composition of the enemy, which consisted of three battle cruisers and the Bluecher, six light cruisers and a number of destroyers steering northwest. The enemy had altered his course to the southeast. From now onward the light cruisers maintained touch with the enemy and kept me fully informed as to their movements.

"The battle cruisers worked up to full speed, steering to the southward. The wind at the time was northeasterly, light, with extreme visibility. At 7:30 a. m. the enemy were sighted on the port [left] bow, steering approximately southeast, distant fourteen miles. Owing to the prompt reports we received we had attained our position on the quarter of the enemy and so altered course to southeast parallel to them, and settled down to a long stern chase, gradually increasing our speed until we reached 28.5 knots. Great credit is due to the engineer staffs of the New Zealand and Indomitable; these ships greatly exceeded their normal speed.

"At 8:52 a. m., as we had closed to within 20,000 yards of the rear ship, the battle cruisers maneuvered to keep on a line of bearing so that the guns would bear, and the Lion fired a single shot, which fell short. The enemy at this time were in single line ahead, with light cruisers ahead and a large number of destroyers on their starboard [right] beam. Single shots were fired at intervals to test the range, and at 9:09 a. m. the Lion made her first hit on the Bluecher, No. 4 in the line. The Tiger opened fire at 9:20 a. m. on the rear ship and the Lion shifted to No. 3 in the line at 18,000 yards, this ship being hit by several salvos. The enemy returned our fire at 9:14 a. m. The Princess Royal, on coming into range, opened fire on the Bluecher, the range of the leading ship being 17,500 yards at 9:35 a. m. The New Zealand was in range of the Bluecher, which had dropped somewhat astern, and opened fire on her. The Princess Royal shifted to the third ship in the line, inflicting considerable damage on her.

"Our flotilla cruisers and destroyers had gradually dropped from a position broad on our beam to our port quarter so as not to foul our aim with their smoke, but the enemy's destroyers threatening attack, the Meteor and the M division passed ahead of us, Capt. H. Meade handling this division with conspicuous ability.

"About 9:45 a. m. the situation was as follows: The Bluecher, the fourth in their line, already showed signs of having suffered severely from gunfire; their leading ship and No. 3 were also on fire, Lion was engaging No. 1, Princess Royal No. 3 and New Zealand No. 4, while the Tiger, which was second in our line, fired first at their No. 1, and when interfered with by smoke at their No. 4.

"The enemy's destroyers emitted vast columns of smoke to screen their battle cruisers and under cover of this the latter now appeared, to have altered course to the northward to increase their distance, and certainly the rear ships hauled out on the port quarter of their leader, thereby increasing their distance from our line. The battle cruisers, therefore, were ordered to form a line bearing north by northwest and proceed at their utmost speed. Their destroyers then showed evident signs of an attempt to attack. The Lion and Tiger opened fire on them, and caused them to retire and resume their original course. The light cruisers maintained an excellent position on the port quarter of the enemy's line, enabling them to observe and keep touch, or attack any vessel that might fall out of the line.

"At 10:48 a. m. the Bluecher, which had dropped considerably astern of the enemy's line, hauled out to port, steering north with a heavy list, on fire, and apparently in a defeated condition. I consequently ordered the Indomitable to attack enemy breaking northward. At 10:54 a. m. submarines were reported on the starboard bow and I personally observed the wash of a periscope two points on our starboard bow. I immediately turned to port.

"At 11:03 a. m., an injury to the Lion being reported as incapable of immediate repair, I directed the Lion to shape a course northwest. I called the Attack [destroyer] alongside, shifting my flag to her at about 11:35 a. m. I proceeded at utmost speed to rejoin the squadron and met it at noon retiring north by northwest. I boarded and hoisted my flag on the Princess Royal at about 12:20 p. m., when Capt. Brock acquainted me of what had occurred since the Lion fell out of the line, namely, that the Bluecher had been sunk and that the enemy battle cruisers had continued their course in a considerably damaged condition. He also informed me that a Zeppelin and a seaplane had endeavored to drop bombs on the vessels which went to the rescue of the survivors of the Bluecher.

"At 2 p. m. I received a report from the Lion that the starboard engine was giving trouble owing to priming, and at 3:35 p. m. I ordered the Indomitable to take her in tow, which was accomplished by 5 p. m."

The casualties on the British ships were few. Admiral Beatty reported that only seventeen men were wounded on the Lion. The total loss was fourteen killed and twenty-nine wounded. The heaviest loss on the German side resulted from the sinking of the Bluecher, only 123 of the complement of 350 officers and men being rescued. These were taken to Scotland as prisoners. Capt. Erdmann of the Bluecher was among those saved, but he was suffering severely from shock and died Feb. 16. The total number of casualties on the German ships was not made public.

ENGLISH COAST BOMBARDED.

Early on the morning of Dec. 16, 1914, a German battle cruiser and two lighter cruisers found their way through a heavy fog to the northeastern coast of England and bombarded Scarborough, Whitby and Hartlepool, killing 101 and wounding 282 persons. The victims were practically all civilians, a considerable proportion being women and children. Eighty-two were killed in Hartlepool, seventeen in Scarborough and two in Whitby. Much private property was destroyed by the shells. The raiding warships succeeded in making their way back to the German naval base without suffering any damage. As several merchant vessels were blown up off Flamborough head within the next two days, the presumption was that floating mines were dropped by the German cruisers as they retreated. It was claimed on behalf of Germany that all the towns bombarded were defended places, but this was denied by the English, who declared that there were no forts or guns at Scarborough or Whitby.

NAVAL DISASTERS AT THE DARDANELLES.

Early in the war the attention of the entente powers was directed to the necessity of closing or obtaining possession of the Dardanelles, the narrow strait connecting the Aegean sea with the Sea of Marmora, the Bosphorus and the Black sea. This historic waterway was heavily fortified on both the European and Asiatic sides and was supposed to be impregnable to attack by ships of war. The German cruisers Goeben and Breslau, when pursued by British warships in the Mediterranean, entered the strait Aug. 9, 1915, and were permitted to proceed to Constantinople, where they were turned over to the Turkish government, though the Ottoman empire then was supposed to be neutral. From that time on the British and French fleets were on guard to prevent the two cruisers from returning to the Mediterranean sea and the Atlantic ocean to engage in the work of destroying merchant vessels belonging to the allies.

Turkey cast its lot with Germany and Austria-Hungary when it attacked Russia Oct. 29, and after the allies had formally declared war against Turkey Nov. 5 they were free to act against the Dardanelles as they might see fit. Their ships of war bombarded some of the fortified Turkish positions on the coast of Asia Minor late in December and in January, but no serious work was attempted until Feb. 19, 1915, when a combined fleet of thirty-two British and French warships began to shell the forts at the Aegean sea entrance to the Dardanelles. The bombardment was continued on the 20th and was resumed on the 25th at 8 a. m. After a period of long range firing the squadron of battle ships attacked at close quarters and soon had the forts at the entrance reduced.

Sweeping operations, covered by a division of battle ships and destroyers, were immediately begun and on the 26th, after the waters of the strait had been cleared of mines up to within four miles of the entrance, the Albion and Majestic, supported by the Vengeance, proceeded to the limit of the swept area and began an attack on Fort Dardanus and some new batteries which had been erected on the Asiatic shore. The fire in reply was ineffective. In the afternoon men were landed at Kum Kale and Sidd-el-Bahr from the Vengeance and the Irresistible and the destruction of the defenses there was completed.

Mine sweeping operations and the bombardment of some of the inner forts continued on the 27th and 28th. The strength of the attacking fleet was increased until some forty warships were taking turns in shelling the Turkish positions on both sides of the strait. Monday, March 1, the Triumph, Ocean and Albion entered the waterway and attacked fort No. 8 and the batteries at White cliff. The fire was returned by the forts and also by field guns and howitzers. Monday night a force of mine sweepers, covered by destroyers, swept within a mile and a half of Cape Kephaz.

No action was possible on March 3 until 2 p. m., when, although the weather was still unfavorable, the Irresistible, Albion, Prince George and Triumph resumed the attack on Fort Dardanus and the concealed guns in its neighborhood. A seaplane reconnaissance revealed several encampments of troops and two permanent batteries. March 4 the weather conditions were good and sweeping and bombardment operations within the straits continued steadily. Demolition parties, covered by detachments of marines, were landed at Kum Kale and Sidd-el-Bahr to continue the clearance of the ground at the entrance to the straits. Some skirmishing ensued on both banks, the enemy holding neighboring villages in force. On this day the casualties were nineteen men killed, three missing and twenty-five wounded. Farther down the coast the Sapphire silenced a battery of field guns north of Kikill in the Gulf of Adramyti, while the defenses of Besika were shelled by the Prince George.

On the 5th the attack was begun by indirect fire from the 15-inch guns of the Queen Elizabeth, stationed in the Gulf of Saros, upon the defenses at the narrows, or that part of the strait one and one-half miles wide leading past the town of Gallipoli into the Sea of Marmora. This attack was supported, in dealing with the howitzers, by the Indeflexible and the Prince George. The fire was confined to Forts Mejidieh, Rumidieh, Hamidieh No. 2 and Namazieh. The magazine in one of the forts blew up and other damage was done. The fire of the Indeflexible and Prince George was observed from the inside of the Dardanelles by the Irresistible, Canopus, Cornwallis and Albion. These vessels were much fired at by concealed guns, but were not hit. On the same day Vice-Admiral Sir Richard Peirse, commander in chief of the East Indies squadron, arrived with a number of battle ships and cruisers off Smyrna. Fort Yenickale was bombarded and considerably damaged.

On the 6th of March the battle ship Queen Elizabeth, supported by the battle ships Agamemnon and Ocean, began an attack on Forts Hamidieh 1, Tabia and Hamidieh 3, known on the charts as Forts U and V, by indirect fire across the Gallipoli peninsula, firing at 21,000 yards. The forts were armed with four 14-inch guns, eight 9.4 guns and several smaller guns. Three shells from field guns struck the Queen Elizabeth, but did no damage. Inside the straits the Vengeance, Albion, Majestic and Prince George and the French battle ship Suffren fired on the Souain Dere and Mount Dardanus batteries. Most of the ships in the straits were hit by shells, but no serious damage was done.

On March 7, the weather continuing calm, the four French battle ships, the Gaulois, Charlemagne, Bouvet and Suffren, entered the straits to cover the direct bombardment of the defenses at the narrows by the Agamemnon and Lord Nelson. The French ships engaged the Mount Dardanus batteries and various concealed guns, silencing the former. The Agamemnon and Lord Nelson then advanced and engaged the forts at the narrows at from 14,000 down to 12,000 yards by direct fire. Two of the forts were silenced after a heavy bombardment, explosions occurring in both of them. The Gaulois, Agamemnon and Lord Nelson were each struck three times, but the damage was not serious. The Lord Nelson had three men wounded. The British light cruiser Dublin, which was watching the Bulair isthmus, was struck three or four times by shells.

Mine sweeping operations continued for about ten days within the strait, when a general attack was delivered by the British fleets March 18 upon the fortresses at the narrows. The ships engaged the land defenses at a closer range than previously and by 1 p. m. all the forts had ceased firing. As the French squadron, consisting of the Suffren, Gaulois, Charlemagne and Bouvet, was passing out of the strait the Bouvet was either struck by a mine or was torpedoed from the shore and sank in less than three minutes with heavy loss of life. Its end was hastened by a heavy internal explosion. At 2:36 p. m. the British relief battle ships Vengeance, Irresistible, Albion, Ocean, Swiftsure and Majestic advanced to attack the forts, which had renewed their fire. "At 4:09 p. m.," according to the British official report, "the Irresistible quitted the line and at 5:50 o'clock sank, probably having struck a floating mine. At 6:05 o'clock the Ocean, also having struck a mine, sank. Practically the whole of the crews were removed safely under a hot fire. The Gaulois was damaged by gunfire. The Indeflexible had its forward control position hit by a heavy shell and requires repairs."

Though all the ships sunk belonged to an older class, their loss was severely felt. It demonstrated that the Dardanelles could not be forced by attacks from the sea, and thereafter, while there were many long range bombardments, the allied fleets confined themselves chiefly to assisting in covering the landing of infantry at the tip end of the Gallipoli peninsula and at Suvla bay, conveying transports and in protecting the intrenched land forces from attacks by the Turks. Even in this work they met with severe losses, the most serious being the sinking of the Goliath, Triumph and Majestic, all large battle ships. The Goliath, a ship of 12,950 tons, was torpedoed on the evening of May 12, while protecting the French flank just inside the strait. More than 500 men were lost. The Triumph, 11,800 tons, was sunk by a German submarine May 25, while supporting the Australian and New Zealand forces on the shore of the Gallipoli peninsula. The Majestic, a battle ship of 14,900 tons, met the same fate May 27. The loss of life in each case was considerable. It became known later that the Triumph and the Majestic were sunk by the German submarine U-31, commanded by Capt. Otto Hersing.

LOSS OF THE FORMIDABLE.

The British battle ship Formidable was torpedoed by a German submarine off Portsmouth, England, Jan. 1, 1915. The vessel was proceeding slowly in a heavy sea early on the morning of New Year's day when an explosion occurred under the stern. In a few minutes the big ship began to sink and the men were ordered to take to the boats. Owing to the high waves, which were soon breaking over the vessel, it was almost impossible to get the boats safely overboard. Several of them were smashed or capsized and only two got away. One was picked up by a light cruiser the same day and another reached shore on the following day. Several of those in the boats died from exposure and exhaustion. Out of a total of 780 men only 261 were saved. Capt. Arthur N. Loxley went down with his ship. The Formidable was of 15,000 tons displacement and was built in 1898-1901.

SINKING OF THE DRESDEN.

The German cruiser Dresden was sunk March 14, 1915, by British warships near Juan Fernandez island, in the Pacific, about 400 miles west of the Chilean coast. The British admiralty account of the affair was as follows:

"On the 14th of March at 9 a. m. H. M. S. Glasgow, Capt. John Luce, R. N.; H. M. auxiliary cruiser Orama, Capt. John R. Segrave, R. N., and H. M. S. Kent, Capt. John B. Allen, C. B. R. N., caught the Dresden near Juan Fernandez island.

"An action ensued, and after five minutes' fighting the Dresden hauled down her colors and displayed the white flag. She was much damaged and set on fire, and after she had been burning for some time her magazine exploded and she sank.

"The crew was saved, fifteen being badly wounded. The Germans are being landed at Valparaiso.

"There were no British casualties and no damage to the ships."

German officers of the Dresden on arriving in Valparaiso gave a different version of the loss of their ship. They said that the Dresden was sunk by her own commander after being attacked in Cumberland bay, Juan Fernandez island, while at anchor. Because of damaged machinery and lack of coal the cruiser was obliged to take refuge in the bay, the waters of which were neutral. She was anchored about a quarter of a mile off shore on Sunday morning, when the British cruiser Kent entered on one side and the Glasgow and Orama on the other side of the bay. The British warships opened fire at a distance of a little more than 3,000 yards. The Dresden was not prepared for a fight in neutral waters, but replied feebly within a few minutes.

The Dresden hoisted a parliamentary flag, then lowered boats and sent a protest against being attacked in neutral waters, to which the British commander, according to the German statement, replied that he had orders to sink the vessel wherever it was found, and let the diplomats arrange the matter later, and that he would do so unless the Germans themselves sank the vessel. As a consequence the German commander sent the crew ashore and blew up the Dresden. The casualties numbered three dead and fifteen wounded.

Notes were exchanged between the Chilean and British governments concerning the destruction of the Dresden and these were made public April 15. The Chilean authorities declared that the Dresden had anchored in Cumberland bay, Juan Fernandez island, March 9, and its commander had asked permission to remain eight days for repairs on the ship's engines. The governor refused, as he considered the request unwarranted, and ordered the captain to leave the bay within twenty-four hours. As the order was not obeyed, the captain was informed that his ship was interned. When the British squadron appeared April 14 the governor was about to inform its officers of the situation when the British ships opened fire on the Dresden and sank it. The Chilean government considered that this hostile act violated the neutrality of the country and bore evidence of contempt for its sovereign rights.

In its reply the British government expressed regret that a misunderstanding had occurred and added that it was prepared to offer a full and ample apology to the Chilean government. It was, however, pointed out that, according to British information, the Dresden had not accepted internment and still had her colors flying and her guns trained. "The captain of the Glasgow probably assumed," added the note, "especially in view of the past action of the Dresden, that she was defying the Chilean authorities and abusing Chilean neutrality."

When the war began the Dresden was stationed in Central American waters. She sank the British steamers Hyades and Holmwood, off the coast of Brazil, Aug. 16 and Aug. 26, and then joined Admiral Count von Spee's fleet in the southern Pacific. She was present at the battle off Coronel Nov. 1, but took little part in it. The vessel then continued with Von Spee's squadron and was in the battle off the Falkland islands on Dec. 8, when the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Nürnberg, and Leipzig were destroyed by the British. The Dresden managed to escape and was afterward heard of in the Pacific, where British and Japanese hunted for her in vain until she was cornered in Cumberland bay.

FRENCH CRUISER LEON GAMBETTA TORPEDOED.

The French armored cruiser Leon Gambetta was torpedoed and sunk by an Austrian submarine in the Strait of Otranto leading to the Adriatic sea on the night of April 26-27, 1915. Of the crew of 714 men aboard 552 were drowned. Twenty-six of the survivors were picked up by an Italian destroyer from a raft; the others saved were rescued by ships sent out from the semaphore station of Santa Maria di Leuca, from Brindisi and adjoining places. The Leon Gambetta was operating with other French vessels to prevent the Austrian fleet from leaving the Adriatic sea and interfering with the operations of the allied ships of war in the vicinity of the Dardanelles. It was about midnight and the cruiser was twenty miles from Cape Santa Maria di Leuca when an explosion shook the vessel fore and aft, causing it to list rapidly and sink within ten minutes. Most of the men were asleep at the time and had no chance of escaping. The submarine which sank the cruiser was the U-5, commanded by George Ritter von Trapp. The Leon Gambetta was an armored cruiser of 12,351 tons, built in 1901-1904.

SMALL WAR VESSELS SUNK.

The British lost a destroyer and the Germans two torpedo boats in the North sea May 1, 1915. As told by the British admiralty, the circumstances were as follows: "A series of small affairs took place in the neighborhood of the Galloper and North Hinder lightships on Saturday, May 1. In the forenoon H. M. destroyer Recruit was sunk by a submarine, four officers and twenty-one men being saved by the trawler Daisy. At 3 p. m. the trawler Colombia was attacked by two German torpedo boats, which approached it from the westward and began an action without hoisting their colors. The Colombia was sunk by a torpedo, only one deckhand being saved by the other trawlers. Seventeen lives were lost. A division of British destroyers, comprising the Laforey, Leonidas, Lawford and Lark, chased the two German vessels and after a running fight of about one hour sank them both. The British destroyers sustained no casualties. Two German officers and forty-four men were rescued from the sea and made prisoners of war."

The Galloper lightship is about thirty miles off Harwich on the English side of the North sea and the North Hinder lightship is about the same distance from the Belgian coast.

GIUSEPPE GARIBALDI TORPEDOED.

The Italian armored cruiser Giuseppe Garibaldi was torpedoed and sunk Sunday morning, July 18, 1915, by an Austrian submarine near Cattaro, Dalmatia. The officers and crew jumped into the sea and most of them were saved. The Giuseppe Garibaldi, Varese, Francesco Ferruccio and Vettor Pisani, forming an Italian cruiser squadron, discovered several Austrian battle ships in Cattaro and were retiring when the submarine made the attack. The Giuseppe Garibaldi was of 7,234 tons displacement and was laid down in 1898.

CRUISER AMALFI SUNK.

The Italian armored cruiser Amalfi, while engaged in a reconnaissance in the upper Adriatic, was torpedoed and sunk by an Austrian submarine at dawn July 7, 1915. About 200 of the crew of 700 were drowned. The Amalfi had a displacement of 9,958 tons. It was completed in 1908.

AUXILIARY CRUISERS SUNK.

Many auxiliary cruisers and a number of transports were sunk, as will be seen from the list given elsewhere, but there is space to mention only a few of them which were attended by heavy loss of life. The armed British merchant cruiser Clan MacNaughton went down with some 280 men Feb. 3, 1915. There were no survivors and the manner in which the ship was lost never became known. The British auxiliary cruiser Bayana was sunk by a submarine March 11 off the Scottish coast and only twenty-six of a crew of 216 were saved. The British auxiliary steamship Princess Irene was blown up as it lay at anchor in Sheerness harbor May 27. The loss of life was reported to be 425. The British transport Royal Edward was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine in the Aegean sea Aug. 14. More than 600 men lost their lives.

NAVAL BATTLES IN BALTIC SEA.

Naval engagements between Russian and German squadrons occurred in July and August in the Baltic sea. Though definite details are lacking, it appears that the Germans sustained the heaviest losses. The Russians were assisted by British submarines and it was claimed that one of these sank the German battle ship Pommern of 13,200 tons July 2. It was also reported by the Russians that in a series of engagements with a German fleet in the Gulf of Riga between Aug. 16 and 21 two German cruisers and no fewer than eight torpedo boats were sunk. It was said that at the same time a British submarine sank a German dreadnought. The Russians lost the destroyer Novik and the gunboats Sivutch and Koriets. The Germans admitted the loss of the mine layer Albatross, which was run ashore and sunk early in July, but nothing was reported as to the other alleged disasters.

WAR IN THE AIR.

ZEPPELIN RAIDS ON ENGLAND.

Many Zeppelin dirigible airships raided the eastern counties of England in the course of 1915. Their purpose, as explained by Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin, was to disabuse the British of the idea that they still continued to enjoy a "splendid isolation," as well as to destroy military plants and transit facilities and inspire terror. The first raid occurred Jan. 19, 1915, when Zeppelins bombed Yarmouth and King's Lynn. Other raids occurred on the following places on the dates named: April 14, Blythe and Tyneside; April 16, Lowestoft, Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds; May 10, Southend; May 17, Ramsgate; May 27, Southend; May 31, suburbs of London; June 4, east and south-east coasts; June 6, east coast; June 15, north-east coast; Aug. 9 and 12, east coast; Aug. 17 and 18, eastern counties; Sept. 8, eastern counties and London district; Oct. 13, eastern counties and central part of London. Following were the casualties in the raids:

Date.	In- Killed.	Jured.	Date.	In- Killed.	Jured.
Jan. 19.....	4	9	Aug. 9.....	13	12
April 14.....	—	—	Aug. 12.....	6	23
May 10.....	1	2	Aug. 17.....	10	36
May 17.....	2	8	Sept. 7.....	17	39
May 27.....	3	—	Sept. 8.....	20	86
May 31.....	6	—	Oct. 13.....	56	114
June 6.....	24	40
June 15.....	15	15	Total	177	384

With a few exceptions the victims of the bombs thrown from the Zeppelins were noncombatants, including women and children. Most of the damage done in these raids was to private property. Several of the dirigibles were lost in storms and a few were destroyed by aviators of the allies. There were one or two Zeppelin raids on Paris, but the casualties were few.

ZEPPELIN DESTROYED IN AIR.

One of the most spectacular incidents of the war was the destruction of a large Zeppelin high up in the air by an aviator in a monoplane. The feat was performed by Reginald J. Warneford, a young Canadian sublieutenant in the royal navy, who had but recently learned aviation. On the evening of June 6 he with three other aviators—Lieuts. J. P. Wilson, J. S. Mills and E. T. Votce—set out on an air reconnaissance. About 3:30 o'clock on the morning of the 7th they found themselves north of Brussels, Belgium, and coming lower were able to see a big Zeppelin hangar at Evere. Wilson and Mills threw bombs on the hangar, from which flames immediately shot out.

Warneford reserved his ammunition and proceeded on his journey at an increased speed. Soon he perceived on the horizon, midway between Ghent and Brussels, a Zeppelin flying fast at a height of about 6,000 feet. The Canadian aviator flew toward it, descended to get closer and when almost over it flung six bombs down upon it. The sixth struck the envelope of the dirigible squarely in the middle. Instantly there was a terrific explosion and the big airship fell to the earth in a cloud of flame and smoke. It descended on top of a convent known as the Grand Beguinage de Sainte Elisabeth in the suburb of St. Amand. The twenty-eight men making up the officers and crew of the Zeppelin were dashed to death and several inmates of the convent were killed.

The victorious aviator himself had a narrow escape from death. The displacement of air caused by the explosion was so great that the monoplane was upset and it was with great difficulty that Warneford succeeded in righting it. He was forced to land on hostile ground, but he managed to get a fresh start and make his way to the British lines. He was given the Victoria cross by his own country and the cross of the Legion of Honor by France for his deed.

Lieut. Warneford lost control of a new aeroplane which he was testing near Paris June 17 and falling from a great height he was instantly killed. Henry B. Needham, an American writer, who was a passenger, met the same fate.

AEROPLANE WARFARE.

Aeroplanes continued to be used in increasing numbers as the war progressed, not only for scouting and range finding purposes, but for the destruction of military depots, railroad junctions, ammunition factories and camps. They even attacked submarines and the smaller war vessels with some success. Raiding by squadrons numbering sometimes as many as forty or fifty machines became a regular feature and the destruction wrought by them was reported to be considerable. As a rule the aeroplanes avoided bombarding large cities, where it was almost certain that civilians would be the chief sufferers, but there were a number of exceptions, the excuse usually being given that they were "reprisals" for something done by the enemy. Among the places that suffered were Calais, Paris, Amiens, Karlsruhe, Stuttgart, Venice, Brescia and Udine.

Adolphe Pegoud, one of the most noted of the French aviators, was shot and killed while fighting a German aircraft some time in August, 1915. Bruno Langer, a well known German flyer, was reported in October to have been killed while making a trip over the western frontier.

SUBMARINE WARFARE ON MERCHANT SHIPS.

In the American diplomatic correspondence with Germany and Britain, given elsewhere in this volume, is a detailed discussion of the submarine warfare begun on an extensive scale by Germany Feb. 18, 1915, on merchant ships plying in the waters surrounding the British isles and elsewhere. Accounts are also given in a separate chapter of some of the most serious results of that warfare, such as the sinking of great liners and the killing of large numbers of noncombatants. It remains to give some additional details of the losses as a whole sustained by the various countries from week to week, beginning with the date on which the German marine war zone proclamation went into effect. First it may be noted that according to figures given out by the British admiralty July 23 the British losses up to that date from Aug. 1, 1914, had been:

	No.	Tons.
Merchantmen mined	14	—
Sunk by cruisers	56	—
Submarine	112	—

Total merchantmen	182	599,673
Fishing vessels	168	25,695

-------------------	-----	---------

It was announced by the German admiralty Oct. 16 that since the beginning of the war it had sunk 610 ships, including transports and fishing vessels, with a total tonnage of 1,055,608.

The following table, compiled from the daily reports as sent out by the press association, shows at least approximately the number of vessels sunk and lives lost during the periods named:

Total reported	512	2,286

The above list is to be taken as the minimum, especially as to the loss of life. Where the number of killed or missing was left indefinite no estimate was made. In not a few instances, generally in the case of trawlers and small vessels, it was reported that the crew was lost. It is probable, therefore, that the number of deaths caused by the sinking of merchant vessels alone within the period covered was not less than 2,500.

Of the vessels destroyed from Feb. 13 to Dec. 1, 1915, forty-eight were Norwegian, twenty-seven French, twenty-four German, twenty-two Swedish, twelve Danish, eleven Russian, eight Dutch and four American. The remainder were British, except a few flying the Belgian, Greek, Italian, Austrian, Spanish and other flags. Most of the German vessels were sunk by British submarines late in 1915.

SARAJEVO CONSPIRATORS EXECUTED.

Veljko Cubrilo, Miko Jovanovic and Danelo Ilic, convicted Oct. 26, 1914, of conspiring with Gavrillo Princip and others to kill Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his wife, the duchess of Hohenberg, were executed in the prison of the court fortress at Sarajevo, Bosnia, Feb. 3, 1915. Jakov Zilovic and Nedjo Kerovic, who had been found guilty of high treason and sentenced to death in connection with the same crime, had their sentences commuted to imprisonment for life and for twenty years, respectively. Princip, who was the actual slayer of the Austrian throne heir and his wife, June 28, 1914, could not on account of his youth be sentenced to death and was given a prison sentence of twenty years, which he is serving.

EGYPT A BRITISH PROTECTORATE.

Great Britain formally declared Egypt a protectorate of the empire Dec. 17, 1914, when the following statement was issued:

"His Britannic majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs gives notice that in view of a state of war arising out of the action of Turkey, Egypt is placed under the protection of his majesty, and will henceforth constitute a British protectorate.

"The suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt is thus terminated, and his majesty's government will adopt all measures necessary for the defense of Egypt and the protection of its inhabitants and interests.

"The king has been pleased to approve the appointment of Lieut.-Col. Sir Arthur Henry McMahon to be his majesty's high commissioner for Egypt."

The protectorate was formally proclaimed in Egypt Dec. 18 and announcement made that Prince Hussein Kamil had been appointed sultan in place of Abbas Hilmi, until then the khedive. It was also announced that all Egyptian subjects would be entitled to British protection, that Turkish restrictions on the number and organization of the army were removed, that the foreign relations of the country would be conducted by a British resident in Cairo and that the religious convictions of the Egyptians would be respected scrupulously.

The French government recognized the British protectorate over Egypt and in return the British government gave notice that it adhered to the Franco-Moorish treaty of 1912, giving France a protectorate over Morocco.

FIGHTING IN MESOPOTAMIA.

Numerous encounters between British-Indian troops advancing up the Tigris and Euphrates valleys in Mesopotamia and Turkish troops sent from Bagdad and Constantinople took place early in the spring. In April a force of from 15,000 to 20,000 Turks marched southward toward Sober with the object of driving away the British from Basra, sixty miles northwest of the Gulf of Persia, and cutting off the British at Kurna, forty miles to the north, and forcing their surrender. Informed of the impending attack, the British at Basra marched out and made a night attack on the Turks near Shaiba April 13. The battle continued until the next day and resulted in the defeat of the Ottoman forces, who were compelled to retreat far to the north and northwest. The British took more than 200 prisoners, a number of machine guns and nearly 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition. The battle was considered important in that it placed the British in possession of the part of Mesopotamia through which the projected German railway from Bagdad to the Gulf of Persia was to run.

The British continued to advance slowly until late in November, when they reached a point within ten miles of Bagdad. Here they met with a serious reverse and were compelled to retire for a distance of about 100 miles.

MASSACRES OF ARMENIANS.

Turkey in 1915 took advantage of the European conflict to begin a war of extermination upon the Armenians within its borders. It was said by Viscount Bryce in the British house of lords Oct. 6 that information had come to him from many quarters that there was reason to believe that about 800,000 people of this race had been destroyed since May. "The customary procedure," he said, "was to round up the whole of the population of a designated town. A part of the male population was thrown into prison and the remainder of the population marched out of town and in the suburbs the men were separated from the women and children. The men were taken to a convenient place and shot or bayoneted. The women and children were put under a convoy of the lower kind of soldiers and dispatched to some distant destination.

"They were driven by the soldiers day after day. Many died of hunger. Others were robbed of all they possessed and in many cases the women were stripped naked and made to continue the march in that condition. Many went mad and threw away their children. The caravan route was marked by a line of corpses."

In an appeal made a little earlier to the United States to use its influence in putting an end to the massacres Viscount Bryce gave many details of the butchery. "In Trebizond city," he wrote, "where the Armenians number over 10,000, orders came from Constantinople to seize all Armenians. Troops hunted them, drove them to the shore, took them out to sea, threw them overboard and drowned them all, men, women and children. This was seen and described by the Italian consul."

Stories similar to this came from American missionaries, from consuls and other persons of authority. In nearly all places where Armenians were numerous hundreds were either killed outright or deported and left to starve in the desert. From Urumiah, in Persia, came reports of the killing by Kurds and Turks of Armenian Christians to the number of 20,000. In a letter made public by the American Armenian Relief society in New York. N. Y., Oct. 2, it was said that 1,000,000 Armenians had been deported. "It is a verified fact," declared the writer, "that there were no Armenians left in many parts of the vilayets of Erzerum, Sivas, Harput, Bitlis and Trebizond." Henry Morgenthau, the American ambassador in Turkey, raised $100,000 by private subscriptions for the relief of the Armenians who had been banished to desert towns.

GERMAN COLONIES TAKEN BY ALLIES.

Toward the close of 1915 Germany had but little left of its once extensive colonial possessions. It still retained the greater part of German East Africa and the Kameruns, but both of these were being invaded by British and French forces. At the beginning of the war Germany possessed colonies representing total imports of $50,000,000 annually and exports of $40,000,000, of which Germany itself had $22,000,000 and $17,000,000, respectively. In the Pacific Germany lost to England New Guinea, the Samoan islands and Bismarck archipelago, with 90,835 square miles and 231,000 population, and to Japan Kiaocheu, 117 square miles and 60,000 inhabitants, and the Caroline, Solomon and Marshall islands, with 51,605 square miles and 101,600 inhabitants.

GERMAN SOUTHWEST AFRICA.

The protectorate of German Southwest Africa, having an area of 322,450 square miles and a population of nearly 100,000, was occupied by the military forces of the Union of South Africa after a campaign lasting from September, 1914, to July, 1915. This, of course, resulted from the war between Great Britain and Germany in Europe, no agreement having been made to exclude the colonies and protectorates of the powers in Africa from the zone of hostilities. The German forces were led by Lieut.-Col. Francke with the assistance of the governor of the protectorate, Dr. Theodor Seitz. The campaign for the Union of South Africa and the British empire was conducted by Gen. Louis Botha, whose chief lieutenants were Brig.-Gen. Brits and Brig.-Gen. Myburgh.

Gen. Botha's strategy consisted in dividing his forces into two main columns. One starting from Luederitzbucht on the west coast, with supporting columns from the south and east, advanced to Keetmanshoop, while the other, starting from Swakopmund, just north of Walvis bay, proceeded to Windhoek. There the divisions joined and followed the retreating Germans to Otavi, in the northern part of the protectorate, where the campaign closed. In this movement the right wing of the Union forces were commanded by Brig.-Gen. Myburgh, the left wing by Brig.-Gen. Brits and the center by Gen. Botha himself. The Germans were continually outflanked and had to abandon many strong positions without a struggle.

While the number of men engaged on each side was not great, the campaign was remarkable for the celerity with which the forces under Gen. Botha moved over a difficult and in places waterless country. The troops lived on small rations and what game they could kill and yet they marched from thirty to fifty miles a day. On one occasion the soldiers under Brig.-Gen. Brits covered 200 miles in six days, taking the enemy completely by surprise. The prisoners at the close of the fighting numbered 204 officers and 3,293 men of other ranks. All the Germans were transported to the Union to be held there as prisoners until the end of the war. The officers were allowed to retain their arms and were released on parole within certain prescribed areas.

UPRISING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Early in October, 1914, it became evident that the propaganda of agents sent into the Union of South Africa from the protectorate of German Southwest Africa was bearing fruit and the authorities became increasingly vigilant. One of the first men of any consequence to fall under suspicion was Lieut.-Col. Solomon Gerbardus Maritz, a free lance, who had fought in the South African war and later for the Germans in the Herrero rebellion. He had been placed in charge of the forces in the northwest of the Cape Province, but as something appeared to be wrong Col. Conrad Brits was sent to relieve him.

Oct. 8 Col. Brits sent a message to Maritz to come in and report. Maritz replied defiantly and Maj. Ben Bouwer was sent to take over the command. The major, however, and his companions were taken prisoners by Maritz, who sent an ultimatum to the Union government that unless by 10 o'clock Sunday morning, Oct. 11, Gens. Eertzog, De Wet and Beyers and Cols. Kemp and Muller were permitted to meet him he would attack Col. Brits' forces and invade the Union. Maj. Bouwer found that Maritz had with him some German guns and soldiers in addition to his own rebel commando. His whole force numbered about 500 men. The government of the Union of South Africa declared martial law Oct. 12 and took prompt measures to put an end to the uprising, the center of which appeared to be at Upington, on the Orange river, at which place Lieut.-Col. Maritz was encamped. It appeared that the governor of German Southwest Africa had made an agreement with Maritz guaranteeing the independence of the Union as a republic in return for the cession of Walvis bay and other territory to the Germans.

It became quickly apparent that the uprising had little sympathy even among the Boers who had fought against the British in the war of 1899-1902. Such leaders as Gen. Louis Botha, premier of the Union, and Gen. J. C. Smuts, minister of finance, remained loyal and quickly entered upon the task of subduing the insurrectionists. Among those who joined the rebels were Gen. Christian R. De Wet in the Northern Orange Free State and Gen. Christian F. Beyers in the Western Transvaal. Both of these men induced a number of burghers to join them and take the field.

Under the leadership of Gen. Botha the military forces attacked the rebels wherever they gathered and almost invariably routed them. Actions were fought at Rustenburg, Doornberg, Kroonstad, Zandfontein, Bultfontein, Dewetsdorp, Upington and elsewhere, the campaign continuing throughout November, December and the greater part of January. All the rebel leaders were captured except one—Gen. Beyers, who was drowned in the Vaal river while trying to escape. The results of the uprising were summarized by Finance Minister Smuts when he announced March 4, 1915, that 10,000 rebel prisoners had been taken and that the total casualties on both sides were approximately 1,000. Additional facts as to the fighting and the fate of the rebel leaders will be found in the appended chronology.

ANTI-GERMAN RIOTS IN LONDON.

Violent anti-German riots occurred in London May 12 and 13, 1915. The hatred and suspicion of Germans living in England which had been smoldering for a long time was fanned to frenzy by the sinking of the Lusitania and found expression in the wrecking and looting of hundreds of shops owned by Germans and the injuring of many persons. Nearly every district in the metropolis was the scene of disturbances. English as well as German shops suffering in some cases. One of the worst riots occurred in the Camden Town district, where at least 150 stores were damaged. Demonstrations of a serious character also took place in the Poplar, Canning Town and Blackfriars districts. The police and government authorities made every effort to quell the disorders and some days later it was announced that 866 arrests had been made. Those injured in the riots numbered 257. Similar disturbances, though on a smaller scale, occurred in Newcastle, Greenock, Gravesend, the mining district in Yorkshire and elsewhere. The government immediately took steps to quell the disorders by announcing that all male subjects of military age belonging to enemy countries would be segregated and that those over military age would be repatriated. This Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons was to be done for the safety of the aliens themselves as well as for that of the country. This policy was pursued and the anti-German riots ceased.

RIOTING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Simultaneously with the anti-German demonstrations in London riots of the same character took place in Johannesburg, Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Durban and Bloemfontein in the Union of South Africa. The total value of the German property destroyed there between May 12 and 16 was estimated at $5,000,000.

ATROCITIES IN BELGIUM.

REPORT OF BRYCE COMMISSION.

The special commission appointed by the British government to investigate and report on "outrages alleged to have been committed by German troops during the present war," through its chairman, Viscount James Bryce, presented its report to Premier Asquith May 12. Associated with Lord Bryce on the committee were Sir Frederick Pollock, Sir Edward Clarke, Sir Alfred Hopkinson, H. A. L. Fisher, vice-chancellor of the University of Sheffield; Harold Cox and Kenelm E. Digby. The investigation was made with great care, the testimony of no fewer than 1,200 witnesses being taken and sifted. The conclusions reached by the committee were considered to be of exceptional weight owing to the high standing of Lord Bryce as a historian and statesman. The most important findings are summed up in the report as follows:

"1. That there were in many parts of Belgium deliberate and systematically organized massacres of the civil population, accompanied by many isolated murders and other outrages.

"2. That in the conduct of the war generally, innocent civilians, both men and women, were murdered in large numbers, women violated and children murdered.

"3. That looting, house burning and the wanton destruction of property were ordered and countenanced by the officers of the German army, that elaborate provision had been made for systematic incendiarism at the very outbreak of the war and that the burning and destruction were frequently where no military necessity could be alleged, being indeed part of a system of general terrorization.

"4. That the rules and usages of war were frequently broken, particularly by the using of civilians, including women and children, as a shield for advancing forces exposed to fire, to a less degree by killing the wounded and prisoners and in the frequent abuse of the Red Cross and the white flag. Murder, lust and pillage prevailed over many parts of Belgium on a scale unparalleled in any other war between civilized nations during the last three centuries."

The report cites a large number of specific cases in support of its conclusions and makes the following comment:

"Individual acts of brutality—ill treatment of civilians, attacks on women, plunder and the like—were very widely committed. These are more numerous and more shocking than would be expected in warfare between civilized powers, but they differ rather in extent than in kind from what had happened in previous, though not recent, wars.

"In the present war, however—and this is the gravest charge against the German army—the evidence shows that the killing of noncombatants was carried out to an extent for which no previous war between nations claiming to be civilized (for such cases as the atrocities perpetrated by the Turks on the Bulgarian Christians in 1876, and on the Armenian Christians in 1895 and 1896, do not belong to that category) furnishes any precedent. That this killing was done as part of a deliberate plan is clear from the facts hereinbefore set forth regarding Louvain, Aerschot, Dinant and other towns. The killing was done under orders in each place. Some of the officers who carried out the work did it reluctantly and said they were obeying directions from their chiefs.

"In the minds of Prussian officers war seems to have become a sort of sacred mission, one of the highest functions of the omnipotent state, which is itself as much an army as a state. Ordinary morality and the ordinary sentiment of pity vanish in its presence, superseded by a new standard which justifies to the soldier every means that can conduce to success, however shocking to a natural sense of justice and humanity, however revolting to his own feelings.

"The spirit of war is deified. Obedience to the state and its war lord leaves no room for any other duty or feeling. Cruelty becomes legitimate when it promises victory. Proclaimed by the heads of the army, this doctrine would seem to have permeated the officers and affected even the private soldiers.

"The doctrine is plainly set forth in the German official monograph on 'the usages of war on land,' issued under the direction of the German staff. This book is pervaded throughout by the view that whatever military needs suggest becomes thereby lawful, and upon this principle, as the diaries show, the German officers acted."

GERMAN WHITE BOOK ON BELGIAN ATROCITIES.

In a "white book," issued by the German authorities May 29, 1915, emphatic denial was made of the charges of extreme and unwarranted cruelty to civilians in Belgium contained in the Belgian report made public in Washington, D. C., Sept. 16, 1914, and in the Bryce committee report published May 12, 1915.

The alleged attacks made upon the German troops by the Belgian population are declared to be in violation of articles 1 and 2 of the Geneva convention, in that the assailants were not organized troops. The soldiery, the document sets forth, was actuated only by the instinct of self-preservation.

The charges of atrocities made in the two reports are declared to be libels. So far from admitting the allegations of atrocities against women and children, the white book declares that particular care was taken to protect women, children and old men from danger, whenever possible.

The document charges, on the other hand, that Belgian women frequently participated in the attacks made upon the Germans. Hot tar and scalding water were poured upon the troops from upper windows and many captured soldiers were mutilated cruelly.

At Aerschot, the document states, residents of the city fired upon the troops without provocation and the German commander was treacherously murdered in the mayor's residence. At Dinant the cathedral was used as a point of attack against the Germans.

In Louvain, it is charged, the population turned against the troops after pretending to show friendship. There priests goaded the citizens to the attack, and German hospitals were fired upon. The Germans admit setting the houses of some of the offenders afire, but declare that they themselves checked the conflagration in order that innocent persons might not suffer.

"Immediately after the start of the present war," the book says, "a wild fight of the entire people against the German troops broke out, which forms a flagrant violation of international rights and which had more serious results for the country of Belgium and its people.

"This war, fought by people excited to the highest passion, lasted during the entire advance of the German army through Belgium. As the Belgian army, after stubborn fights, retreated before the German troops, the Belgian civilian population in all parts of the country not yet occupied by Germans endeavored by all means to delay the German advance.

"They did not hesitate, in places which already had been occupied by German troops, to hurt and weaken the German army through cowardly attacks. That the Belgian civilian population of every rank, age and sex, with the greatest fury and rage, took part in the fights against the German troops is proved by overwhelming material founded on official and in many cases sworn testimony.

"According to material in hand, the Belgian civilian population in numerous places in the provinces of Liege, Luxembourg, Namur, Henegau, Brabant, East and West Flanders fought against German troops, and the fight was particularly terrible in character at Aerschot, Ardenne, Dinant and Liege, of which special reports have been received by the German war department from special military committees appointed to look into violations of the rules of war.

"According to these, men of various professions and trades, workmen, manufacturers, physicians, school teachers, even priests and women and children, were caught with arms in hand in parts of the country from which the Belgian regular troops had retired long ago.

"Shots were fired at the German troops from houses, gardens, roofs, cellars, fields and woods. During these fights means were used which certainly would never have been used by regular troops, and there were, therefore, many wounds from shotguns and scalds from hot tar and boiling water.

"What we principally accuse the Belgian population of is shameless violation of the rules of war in various places. For instance, at Liege, Brussels, Aerschot and Dinant German soldiers have been murdered from behind, which violates the rule against 'assassination or wounding of members of hostile people or army.' [Article 23, paragraph 1B of the treaty of The Hague.]

"The Belgian people have besides paid no attention to the flag of the Red Cross, thus violating article 9 of the Geneva convention especially. They have not hesitated to shoot at German troops protected by this flag, and attack hospitals containing wounded soldiers as well as surgeons and nurses performing their duties.

"Finally, it has been proved beyond a doubt that German wounded soldiers have been robbed and murdered, nay, even mutilated in a most horrible manner, and that even women and young girls have taken part in such horrible crimes. The German wounded soldiers have had their eyes gouged out, ears, noses and fingers cut off, their abdomens cut open, while in other cases the German soldiers have been poisoned, hanged in trees, sprinkled with burning fluids and burned in other manners so they died in a particularly painful manner.

"This beastly behavior on the part of the Belgian population, not only against the express obligation to show respect and look after the sick and wounded of a hostile army [article 1, paragraph 1, Geneva convention], but also a blow in the face of the first principles and rules of war and humanity.

"Under these circumstances the Belgian civilian population who took part in the fight had, of course, no right to claim to be treated as belligerents, but the instinct of self-preservation of the German army distinctly demanded that the sternest of measures be taken against these franc-tireurs. All of these persons who fought against German troops therefore had to be killed, and the prisoners taken could not be treated as prisoners of war, but as common murderers.

"In spite of this we have, whenever it was not against the necessity of war, endeavored to preserve the rules of war, and prisoners were, whenever it was in any way possible, shot only after a regular examination or as sentenced by a court-martial.

"Old men, women and children, even when suspected, were spared as far as it was in any way possible, and, although the patience of the German soldiers was tried to the utmost by those vicious attacks, they often in a most self-sacrificing manner cared for these people in every manner, giving aid to the helpless, sharing their bread with them and nursing the weak and suffering.

"That the Belgian government must take the blame for this violation of international rights by the people of Belgium is beyond any doubt.

"The incontestable fact that from the very beginning the German troops in Belgium were forced in the interest of self-preservation to fight against the population may easily be proved by looking into the matter through a commission from any part of the world.

"In various places it has been proved that explosives and bombs were used, and it also is proved that hot tar was poured on German troops. In single instances part of the population even committed dreadful cruelties against helpless German soldiers.

"A reservist found in the cellar of a house at Louvain the body of a German soldier whose abdomen had been cut open with a sharp knife, so that the bowels protruded. Another German soldier was mutilated by furious and inhuman inhabitants in such an atrocious manner that he died.

"Those inhabitants who had taken part in the attack were shot and the houses from which the shots had been fired were burned. It was not possible to prevent the fire from spreading to other houses and destroying some streets.

"The Belgian government itself has never dared to state that regular troops belonging to the Belgian army took part in the Louvain fighting. It was a cowardly attack by franc-tireurs, who were willingly received and hidden by the people of Louvain.

"Crimes committed by the civil guard were revealed to the entire civilized world. At Louvain unfortunately a number of priests were fanatic enough to abuse their influence upon the people and advise them to receive franc-tireurs, and it was proved that a number of them even took a personal part in the fighting.

"Whoever reads the reports of the German government concerning Louvain—which were not founded on observations of excited and in most cases uneducated people, but on a rational, calmly undertaken examination—must realize how worthless are similar accusations against German troops which have been made by the Belgians.

"How little value the commission itself places upon its imaginary statements which have been reproduced elsewhere, without any attempt of criticism, is proved by the execution of Bishop Coenraet and Pater Schmidt. It speaks itself of an imaginary execution and adds to the story that involuntary witnesses to this imaginary scene were forced to show their approval in clapping of hands.

"It is not possible to produce stronger proof that this material was hurriedly gathered for the purpose of making a sensation regardless of truth and justice than the fact, of which the Belgian commission can hardly pretend to be ignorant, that Bishop Coenraet is even to-day safe and sound, living with Prof. Dr. Toels in Jirlen, Holland."

EXECUTION OF MISS EDITH CAVELL.

Miss Edith Cavell, an English woman, head of a training school for nurses in Brussels, Belgium, was arrested there by the Germans Aug. 5, 1915, sentenced to death and executed Oct. 12.

The charge against her was that she had harbored fugitive British and French soldiers and Belgians of military age and had assisted them to escape from Belgium in order to join the colors. Miss Cavell was the daughter of an English clergyman, the late Rev. Frederick Cavell, vicar of Swardston, near Norwich. She received her training at the London hospital.

Brand Whitlock, American minister at Brussels, made strong efforts to save Miss Cavell from death, but without avail. Late on the night of Oct. 11 he sent by a messenger the following note to the German governor, Baron von der Lancken:

"My dear Baron: I am too sick to present my request myself, but I appeal to your generosity of heart to support it and save from death this unhappy woman. Have pity on her!"

"BRAND WHITLOCK."

Minister Whitlock telegraphed Oct. 12 to Ambassador Page in London:

"Miss Cavell was sentenced yesterday and executed at 2 o'clock this morning despite our best efforts, continued until the last moment."

Hugh S. Gibson, secretary of the American legation in Brussels, in a memorandum which was forwarded with Mr. Whitlock's report to London and was published with other documents in the case Oct. 22, in Britain and generally throughout the world, said that Herr Conrad, an official of the German civil branch, gave positive assurance on the 11th that the American legation would be fully informed of the developments in the case.

"Despite these assurances," said Mr. Gibson, "we made repeated inquiries that day, the last one at 6:30 p. m. Mr. Conrad then stated that sentence had not been pronounced and specifically renewed his previous assurances that he would not fail to inform us as soon as there was any news. At 8:30 it was learned from an outside source that sentence had been passed in the afternoon, before the last conversation with Mr. Conrad, and that the execution would take place during the night."

Mr. Gibson, accompanied by Mr. Delavan, counselor of the American legation, and the Spanish minister to Belgium, went to Baron von der Lancken's headquarters and pleaded earnestly with him for delay in carrying out the sentence. The baron said that the military governor was the supreme authority and that an appeal from his decision could only be carried to the emperor. The military governor in a conference with the baron said he had acted only after mature deliberation and that he considered the death penalty imperative.

Miss Cavell was tried by a court-martial with others accused of the same offense and was shot in the prison of St. Gilles at 2 o'clock in the morning by a squad of soldiers. Those who saw her before and at the time of her execution said that she met her death bravely. She acknowledged at the trial that she had helped soldiers to escape, but there seems to be nothing on record to show that she had been guilty of spying.

In view of all the circumstances and of the fact, announced in Minister Whitlock's report to Ambassador Page, that she had nursed German officers and soldiers, the execution of Miss Cavell aroused much adverse criticism not only in Great Britain but in neutral countries. Services attended by many distinguished persons were held in St. Paul's cathedral, London, Oct. 29, in memory of the dead nurse and steps were taken to erect a monument in her honor.

Dr. Alfred F. M. Zimmerman, German under-secretary for foreign affairs, issued a long statement Oct. 24, justifying the execution of Miss Cavell on the ground that she was at the head of "a well-thought-out, worldwide conspiracy to render the most valuable services to the enemy to the disadvantage of our army." That Emperor William did not approve of the action taken was shown by the fact that he pardoned Countess Johanna de Belleville, Mdle. Louise Thullier and other Belgians condemned to death for the same offense as that of which Miss Cavell was convicted and also by the fact that he ousted from his position Gen. Sauberzweig, the Prussian military governor of Brussels, who signed the death sentence of the English nurse.

CABINET CHANGES CAUSED BY THE WAR.

Many changes in the cabinets of Europe were occasioned by the war, most of them resulting from a desire to consolidate all interests by placing administrative power upon a national rather than a political or party basis. In some instances the ministries in neutral countries were replaced or reorganized to conform with the attitude of the people with respect to the maintenance of neutrality or entrance into the war. In other cases individual ministers were dismissed for special reasons.

The French cabinet was reorganized before the war was a month old. On Aug. 26, 1914, the old cabinet resigned and a new one was formed. Rene Viviani retained the premiership, but such men were brought in as Theophile Delcasse, minister of foreign affairs; Alexandre Millerand, minister of war; Marcel Sembat, minister of public works; Alexandre Ribot, minister of finance, and M. Guesde, minister without portfolio. There was no change of importance in this cabinet until early in October, 1915, when Theophile Delcasse resigned because he was not of the same opinion as his colleagues with respect to continuing the disembarkation of troops at Saloniki after the fall of the Venizelos ministry in Greece. Later the Viviani cabinet was given a vote of confidence, but a certain number of deputies abstained from voting, and toward the close of the month the ministry resigned, to be succeeded by a new cabinet headed by M. Briand as premier and minister of foreign affairs. Gen. J. S. Gallieni was made minister of war, Alexandre Ribot minister of finance and Rene Viviani minister of justice.

COALITION MINISTRY IN ENGLAND.

In England a coalition cabinet was formed May 25, 1915, by the retirement of eight liberal members and the substitution of eight unionists. Some of the twelve remaining liberals were shifted and one was given a new office—that of minister of munitions. A labor party man, Arthur Henderson, was made minister of education, while Lord Lansdowne was made a minister without portfolio. An effort was made to have John E. Redmond represent the Irish nationalist party in the cabinet, but he declined to take office. Mr. Asquith remained as premier and Sir Edward Grey as minister of foreign affairs. Reginald McKenna succeeded David Lloyd George as chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Lloyd George becoming minister of munitions, a new position created because of the demand for a largely increased output of shells and other war material, the lack of which had caused the old ministry to be criticized. Andrew Bonar Law and Sir Edward Carson, both prominent unionists, became minister for the colonies and attorney-general respectively. Winston Spencer Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, upon whom a fight had been made, accepted the position of chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, Arthur J. Balfour succeeding him in the admiralty. Herbert Samuel became postmaster-general, but the position was taken out of the cabinet. Lord Kitchener remained as minister of war.

Sir Edward Carson resigned his position as attorney-general in the cabinet Oct. 13 because he disagreed with the Balkan policy of his colleagues, and a few days later he was succeeded by Sir Frederick E. Smith. Nov. 11 Mr. Churchill resigned his office of chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, as it was found that he could not be included in the war council of five or six members of the cabinet which it had been decided to form in order to carry on the war more effectively. The position vacated by Mr. Churchill was taken by Herbert L. Samuel, the postmaster-general. Mr. Churchill immediately proceeded to the front in France to serve with his regiment.

The war council in the British cabinet in December, 1915, consisted of Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, Premier Asquith, David Lloyd George, Reginald McKenna, Andrew Bonar Law and Arthur J. Balfour.

RESIGNATION OF COUNT BERTCHTOLD.

Count Leopold von Berchtold, Austro-Hungarian minister of foreign affairs, resigned his office Jan 13, 1915, and was succeeded by Baron Stephan Burian, Hungarian minister to the royal court in Vienna. As the retiring official was the author of the ultimatum of July 23, 1914, to Serbia, which precipitated the great European war, his withdrawal caused a stir in diplomatic and other circles. It was known that his war policy was unsatisfactory to the Hungarians, as it had been criticized severely by Count Tisza, the premier in Budapest, who intimated that his country must be given a better position in the dual empire than had been accorded to it. It was also suggested that the change had the approval of Germany, which desired the establishment of better relations between Austria and Hungary at such a critical time. Baron Burian, it was said, was in royal favor in Vienna on account of his experience as Austro-Hungarian minister of finance and in the larger affairs of the monarchy.

Dec. 1 it was announced that Emperor Francis

Joseph had accepted the resignation of Dr. Karl Baron Heonold, minister of the interior; Dr. Rudolf Schuster von Bonnot, minister of commerce, and Baron Engel, minister of finance. They were succeeded by Prince Hohenlohe Schillingfurst as minister of the interior, Ritter von Leth as minister of finance and Herr von Spitzmiller as minister of commerce. It was reported that the resignations were due to attempts by Germany to force a zollverein on Austria-Hungary, a policy to which the retiring members of the ministry objected.

PRUSSIAN MINISTER OF WAR.

Lieut.-Gen. Erich von Falkenhayn was succeeded Jan. 21, 1915, as Prussian minister of war by Maj.-Gen. Wild von Hohenborn. Gen von Falkenhayn had previously been made chief of the German general staff. Germany has no cabinet, properly speaking, the imperial authorities or secretaries of state acting independently of each other.

CHANGES IN RUSSIAN CABINET.

The Russian cabinet was reorganized to a considerable extent in June, 1915. M. Goremynkin remained as premier or president of the council and M. Bark as minister of finance, but Gen Sukhomlinoff was succeeded as minister of war by Gen. Polivanoff, M. Malakoff by Prince Scherbatoff as minister of the interior and M. Casso by Count Ignatieff as minister of instruction. These changes were in the direction of added representation for the liberal element in the empire.

GREEK CABINET CHANGES.

Because of the strenuous efforts of King Constantine and the pro-German party in Greece to carry out their own will without reference to the wishes of the majority of the people, M. Venizelos, a strong friend of the allies, who was returned to power as a result of the elections held in June, 1915, resigned in October, and was succeeded by M. Zaimis, a former premier. M. Zaimis was succeeded early in November by M. Skouloudis. Then in order to prevent any action by the chamber of deputies adverse to his own policy the king dissolved the chamber Nov. 12 and ordered an election for Dec. 19.

RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY BRYAN.

LETTER TO PRESIDENT.

William J. Bryan, secretary of state, resigned his office June 8, 1915, because of his objection to the second Lusitania note prepared by the president for transmission to Germany. His letter of resignation addressed to Mr. Wilson follows:

"My Dear Mr. President: It is with sincere regret that I have reached the conclusion that I should return to you the commission of secretary of state with which you honored me at the beginning of your administration.

"Obedient to your sense of duty and actuated by the highest motives you have prepared for transmission to the German government a note in which I cannot join without violating what I deem to be an obligation to my country, and the issue involved is of such moment that to remain a member of the cabinet would be as unfair to you as it would be to the cause which is nearest my heart, namely, the prevention of war.

"I, therefore, respectfully tender my resignation, to take effect when the note is sent, unless you prefer an earlier hour. Alike desirous of reaching a peaceful solution of the problems arising out of the use of submarines against merchantmen, we find ourselves differing irreconcilably as to the methods which should be employed.

"It falls to your lot to speak officially for the nation: I consider it to be none the less my duty to endeavor, as a private citizen, to promote the end which you have in view by means which you do not feel at liberty to use.

"In severing the intimate and pleasant relations which have existed between us during the last two years, permit me to acknowledge the profound satisfaction which it has given me to be associated with you in the important work which has come before the state department, and to thank you for the courtesies extended.

"With the heartiest good wishes for your personal welfare and for the success of your administration, I am, my dear president, very truly yours,
W. J. BRYAN."

PRESIDENT WILSON ACCEPTS RESIGNATION.

President Wilson's letter accepting the resignation follows:

"My Dear Mr. Bryan: I accept your resignation only because you insist upon its acceptance, and I accept it with much more than deep regret, with a feeling of personal sorrow. Our two years of close association have been very delightful to me.

"Our judgments have accorded in practically every matter of official duty and of public policy until now; your support of the work and purposes of the administration has been generous and loyal beyond praise; your eagerness to take advantage of every great opportunity for service it offered has been an example to the rest of us; you have earned our affectionate admiration and friendship. Even now we are not separated in the object we seek, but only in the method by which we seek it.

"It is for these reasons my feeling about your retirement from the secretaryship of state goes so much deeper than regret. I sincerely deplore it. Our objects are the same and we ought to pursue them together. I yield to your desire only because I must, and wish to bid you good-speed in the parting. We shall continue to work for the same causes, even when we do not work in the same way.

"With affectionate regard, sincerely yours,
"WOODROW WILSON."

REASONS FOR RESIGNING.

June 9 Mr. Bryan issued a statement amplifying his reasons for resigning. "Two of the points on which we differ," he said, "are, first, as to the suggestion of investigation by an international commission; second, as to warning Americans against traveling on belligerent vessels or with cargoes of ammunition. I believe that this nation should frankly state to Germany that we are willing to apply in this case the principle which we are bound by treaty to apply to disputes between the United States and thirty countries with which we have made treaties providing for investigation of all disputes of every character and nature.

"These treaties, negotiated under this administration, make war practically impossible between this country and the thirty governments representing nearly three-fourths of all the people of the world. Among the nations with which we have these treaties are Great Britain, France and Russia. No matter what disputes may arise between us and these treaty nations, we agree that there shall be no declaration and no commencement of hostilities until the matters in dispute have been investigated by an international commission, and a year's time is allowed for investigation and report.

"This plan was offered to all the nations, without any exceptions whatever, and Germany was one of the nations that accepted the principle, being the twelfth, I think, to accept. No treaty was actually entered into with Germany, but I cannot see that that should stand in the way when both nations indorsed the principle. Such an offer, if accepted, would at once relieve the tension and silence all the fingoos who are demanding war.

"The second point of difference is as to the course which should be pursued in regard to Americans traveling on belligerent ships or with cargoes of ammunition. Why should an American citizen be permitted to involve his country in war by traveling upon a belligerent ship when he knows that the ship will pass through a danger zone? The question is not whether an American citizen has a right under international law to travel on a belligerent ship; the question is whether he ought not, out of consideration for his country, if not for his own safety, avoid danger when avoidance is possible. * * *

"President Taft advised Americans to leave Mexico when insurrection broke out there, and President Wilson has repeated the advice. This advice, in my judgment, was eminently wise, and I think the same course should be followed in regard to warning Americans to keep off vessels subject to attack.

"I think, too, that American passenger ships should be prohibited from carrying ammunition. The lives of passengers ought not to be endangered by cargoes of ammunition whether that danger comes from possible explosions within or from possible attacks from without. Passengers and ammunition should not travel together. The attempt to prevent American citizens from incurring these risks is entirely consistent with the effort which our government is making to prevent attacks from submarines. The use of one remedy does not exclude the use of the other."

June 10 Mr. Bryan issued another statement which appeared simultaneously with President Wilson's second Lusitania note. In this statement the former secretary of state reiterated that both he and the president agreed in purpose, but disagreed as to systems. "Among the influences which governments employ in dealing with each other," he wrote, "there are two which are pre-eminent and antagonistic—force and persuasion. Force speaks with firmness and acts through the ultimatum; persuasion employs argument, courts investigation and depends upon negotiation. Force represents the old system—the system that must pass away. Persuasion represents the new system—the system that has been growing, all too slowly, it is true, but growing for 1,900 years.

"In the old system war is the chief corner stone-war, which at its best is little better than war at its worst; the new system contemplates a universal brotherhood established through the uplifting power of example. If I correctly interpret the note to Germany it conforms to the standards of the old system rather than to the rules of the new, and I cheerfully admit that it is abundantly supported by precedents—precedents written in characters of blood upon almost every page of human history."

ROBERT LANSING SUCCEEDS BRYAN.

Robert Lansing of New York was appointed secretary of state to succeed William J. Bryan June 23, 1915. He had been counselor of the department since March 20, 1914, when he took the place of John Bassett Moore, resigned. Mr. Lansing was born in Watertown, N. Y., Oct. 17, 1864; was graduated from Amherst in 1886, and was admitted to the bar in 1889. He represented the United States as counsel for the Berling sea claims commission, the Alaskan boundary and for the north Atlantic coast fisheries arbitration at The Hague. As counselor for the state department he in collaboration with President Wilson wrote some of the most important state papers dealing with situations arising from the war in Europe. Mr. Bryan signing them as head of the department. Though a democrat in politics, it was Mr. Lansing's ability as an international lawyer which brought him the appointment as counselor and finally led to his becoming a member of the cabinet.

WOMEN'S PEACE CONGRESS AT THE HAGUE.

Women from various European countries, including Holland, Belgium, Germany, England, Austria and Hungary, and from the United States and Canada, attended an international conference at The Hague, Holland, April 27-May 1, to protest against war and consider means for bringing about permanent peace throughout the world. The attendance was good, though many delegates and intending visitors were prevented from coming by military and naval obstacles. The United States was represented by nearly eighty women, one of whom, Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, was chosen to preside over the meetings. The women of France declined to send any delegates to the conference, which was not officially recognized by the Dutch queen or government. The dominant sentiments of the delegates were expressed in the two following resolutions, which were adopted:

"The international congress of women of different nations, creeds, classes and parties is united in expressing sympathy with the suffering of all, whatever their nationality, who are fighting for their country or who are laboring under the burden of war. Since the mass of the people of each of the countries now warring believe themselves to be fighting, not aggressively but in self-defense and for their national existence, it urges the governments of the world to put an end to this bloodshed and to begin peace negotiations, and it emphatically demands that the peace which follows shall be permanent, and therefore based upon justice and principles which include those adopted by this congress.

"The international congress of women resolves immediately to ask neutral countries to take steps to create a conference of neutrals, which, without delay, shall offer continuous mediation by inviting suggestions for a settlement from each of the belligerents and by submitting to all of them simultaneously reasonable proposals as a basis for peace."

Several of the delegates made speeches in which they declared themselves to be opposed to a peace at any price policy and a Belgian woman said that there could be no peace without justice. "The war," she said, "must be continued until the Belgians' wrongs have been righted." Miss Jane Addams, Signora Genoni of Italy and Dr. Aletta Jacobs of Holland were appointed delegates to visit the belligerent nations in the interests of peace.

SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA.

Date—May 7, 1915.

Place—Atlantic ocean, near Old Head of Kinsale, Ireland.

Persons aboard—1,906.

Lives lost—1,193.

Cause of sinking—Torpedoes fired from a German submarine.

The Cunard line steamship Lusitania, having a tonnage of 32,500, a length of 735 feet and a speed of nearly twenty-five knots an hour, making it one of the largest and swiftest passenger vessels ever launched, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off the southeastern coast of Ireland May 7, 1915, with a loss of 1,193 lives. Of the victims 102 were Americans; the remainder were British or other foreign subjects.

With Capt. William T. Turner in command, the Lusitania left New York harbor May 1 for Liverpool with a passenger list of 1,255, a crew of 651 and a cargo of miscellaneous merchandise, including 1,271 cases of ammunition, 260,000 pounds of brass, 111,762 pounds of copper and some other military stores. It was not armed, this fact having been ascertained by the port authorities of New York, who made the customary examination. It was estimated that the vessel was worth $10,000,000 and the cargo $735,000. The liner carried an insurance of $7,500,000 and an additional war risk at 1 1/4 per cent. Among the better known passengers were:

Lindon Bates, Jr., engineer.

Mme. Marie Depage, Belgian Red Cross agent.

Justus Miles Foreman, author.

Charles Frohman, theatrical manager.

William S. Hodges, manufacturer.

Albert L. Hopkins, shipbuilder.

Elbert Hubbard, author.

Mrs. Elbert Hubbard, author.

Harry J. Kesser, banker.

Charles Klein, playwright.

CUNARD LINE STEAMSHIP LUSITANIA.

Basil W. Maturin, scholar.
 Fred S. Pearson, engineer.
 Charles A. Plamondon, manufacturer.
 Harry B. Sonnenborn, merchant.
 J. F. Stackhouse, commander U. S. N., retired.
 Herbert Stuart Stone, publisher.
 Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, capitalist.

On the day that the Lusitania sailed the following advertisement appeared in leading New York and other American morning newspapers:

"NOTICE!

"Travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that, in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain or of any of her allies are liable to destruction in those waters and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk.

"IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY.

"Washington, D. C., April 22, 1915."

In spite of this advertisement or "warning," as it was afterward called, there were only the usual number of cancellations by intending passengers. Most of those who failed to appear were detained at home by illness or for other reasons. Those who sailed talked about the notice during the voyage, but apparently no one thought that the great liner with its human freight could actually be destroyed. The voyage was uneventful until the coast of Ireland was sighted on Friday, May 7. The air was clear, though slightly hazy, and the sea calm. While the ordinary speed of the vessel was from twenty-one to twenty-five knots an hour, this had been reduced to eighteen, as the captain did not wish to stop in submarine-infested waters before arriving at Liverpool at high tide Saturday morning. After passing Fastnet and upon entering the danger zone the lifeboats were swung, but no other precautions were taken. No patrol boats or warships convoyed the liner as it proceeded on its voyage in the direction of St. George's channel, though the captain had been instructed by the British admiralty as to what course to steer.

When the vessel at 2 o'clock in the afternoon was passing Old Head of Kinsale and many of the passengers were still at luncheon in the dining saloons some of those who were out on deck saw the periscope of a submarine about half a mile away on the starboard or seaward side of the liner. An instant later they saw the trail of a torpedo approaching at high speed and heard it strike the side of the ship with a terrific crash. Survivors said that a second torpedo struck the liner within a few seconds and that it penetrated the engine room and exploded. The captain heard only one torpedo and later at the inquest held at Kinsale suggested that the second explosion heard by some was caused by the same torpedo after it had pierced the ship's side. All accounts agreed that no warning of any kind was given.

Capt. Turner, who was on the bridge at the time the ship was torpedoed, ordered the course to be changed directly for the shore and that the bulkheads be closed. The lifeboats were not lowered immediately for the reason that while the ship was under headway they would have been swamped if let down to the water. The vessel began to list heavily to starboard and the captain gave orders to stop, but the engines had been put out of commission and nothing could be done with them. The officers did all they could to prevent confusion and panic and to assist in getting boats and rafts clear. The listing of the deck made it difficult to do anything with the boats on the port or upper side and less than a dozen all told reached the surface. Women and children were given the first chance and many acts of heroism on the part of passengers and crew were witnessed. Some of those on board secured life preservers and jumped overboard when they saw that there was no other chance of rescue, while not a few remained in their rooms and went down with the ship.

In less than half an hour from the time it had been torpedoed by the submarine the Lusitania sank beneath the waters, going down bow first. The watches of nearly all the survivors rescued from the wreckage to which they were clinging, including that of Capt. Turner, who was picked up as he was about to sink for the last time, stopped within a few minutes of 2:30 o'clock, the slight variance being due to the intervals between the times when the owners of the watches were plunged into the sea. The captain's watch stopped at 2:36 p. m., but he was practically the last man on the vessel when it disappeared beneath the surface.

The approach and the sinking of the Lusitania were observed by members of the coast guard at the signal station on the cliffs of Old Head of Kinsale, who immediately sent messages to Queenstown and the admiralty announcing the disaster. The wireless signals for help were also heard, though no ship was near enough to give help at once. Tugs were hurriedly sent out from Queenstown and these with the help of trawlers and motor boats picked up the passengers and sailors in the lifeboats and such of the victims as were found alive clinging to bits of wreckage or sustained by life belts. The tug Storm Cock brought the first load of survivors to land and some of these were suffering so severely from shock and exhaustion that they died soon after being taken ashore. All of those able to talk had stories to tell of the heartbreaking scenes they had just witnessed.

Of the better known passengers, whose names have already been given, none was rescued. Some had been seen helping others with life belts and doing all in their power to aid women and children to escape. Alfred G. Vanderbilt and Herbert S. Stone were of this number, according to the testimony of those who had seen them just before the liner sank. The Hubbards probably died in their cabin, as none of the saved remembered seeing them after the torpedoing of the ship.

In Queenstown and Cork everything possible was done for the comfort of the living and for the identification, embalming or decent burial of the dead. In this work the American consul in Cork, Wesley Frost, and the American embassy in London were of great help to such of their countrymen as were involved directly or indirectly in the disaster. Most of the dead were buried in the cemetery at Queenstown.

Several bodies were brought to Kinsale by small boats and on Monday, May 10, an inquest was held by the coroner at this point. Capt. Turner and others were briefly examined, after which the jury returned the following verdict:

"We find that the deceased met death from prolonged immersion and exhaustion in the sea eight miles south-southwest of Old Head of Kinsale Friday, May 7, 1915, owing to the sinking of the Lusitania by torpedoes fired by a German submarine.

"We find that this appalling crime was committed contrary to international law and the conventions of all civilized nations.

"We also charge the officers of said submarine and the emperor and government of Germany, under whose orders they acted, with the crime of wholesale murder before the tribunal of the civilized world.

"We desire to express sincere condolences and sympathy with the relatives of the deceased, the Cunard company and the United States, many of whose citizens perished in this murderous attack on an unarmed liner."

BOARD OF TRADE INQUIRY.

In accordance with the British law a court of inquiry was instituted by the board of trade to take testimony as to the sinking of the Lusitania. This court, over which Baron Mersey presided, examined witnesses and heard arguments from June 15 to July 17, when it returned a report that the loss of the ship and lives was due to damage caused to the vessel by torpedoes fired by a submarine of German nationality. "In the opinion of the court the act was done not merely with the intention of sinking the ship but also with the intention of destroying the lives of the people on board. * * * The whole blame for the cruel destruction of life in this catastrophe must rest solely with those who plotted and with those who committed the crime."

The court found that statements of the German government that the Lusitania was equipped with masked guns, supplied with trained gunners and with special ammunition, that she was transporting Canadian soldiers and that she was violating the laws of the United States were "baseless inventions." Another conclusion reached by the court was that two torpedoes struck the ship on the starboard side and that they were fired without warning of any kind. There was also evidence that shortly afterward another torpedo was fired on the port side, indicating that perhaps more than one submarine took part in the attack. The court found that there was no incompetence or neglect in handling the ship after it was torpedoed and that the reduced speed at which the vessel was running during the voyage was justified by the condition of the transatlantic traffic.

GERMAN STATEMENT.

The following message issued by the German foreign office in Berlin May 10 was delivered by the German ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, to William J. Bryan, secretary of state, in Washington, May 11:

"Please communicate the following to the state department:

"The German government desires to express its deepest sympathy at the loss of lives on board the Lusitania. The responsibility rests, however, with the British government, which through its plan of starving the civilian population of Germany has forced Germany to resort to retaliatory measures.

"In spite of the German offer to stop the submarine war in case the starvation plan was given up, British merchant vessels are being generally armed with guns and have repeatedly tried to ram submarines, so that a previous search was impossible.

"They cannot, therefore, be treated as ordinary merchant vessels. A recent declaration made to the British parliament by the parliamentary secretary in answer to a question by Lord Charles Beresford said that at the present practically all British merchant vessels were armed and provided with hand grenades.

"Besides, it has been openly admitted by the English press that the Lusitania on previous voyages repeatedly carried large quantities of war material. On the present voyage the Lusitania carried 5,400 cases of ammunition, while the rest of the cargo also consisted chiefly of contraband.

"If England, after repeated official and unofficial warnings, considered herself able to declare that that boat ran no risk and thus lightheartedly assumed responsibility for the human life on board a steamer which, owing to its armament and cargo, was liable to destruction, the German government, in spite of its heartfelt sympathy for the loss of American lives, cannot but regret that Americans felt more inclined to trust to English promises rather than to pay attention to the warnings from the German side.

FOREIGN OFFICE."

BRITAIN'S REPLY.

In reply to the German defense of the torpedoing of the Lusitania the following official British statement was transmitted to the American state department May 11:

"The German government states that responsibility for the loss of the Lusitania rests with the British government, which, through its plan of starving the civil population of Germany, has forced Germany to resort to retaliatory measures. The reply to this is as follows:

"The German government on Feb. 4 declared their intention of instituting a general submarine blockade of Great Britain and Ireland, with the avowed purpose of cutting off supplies for these islands. This blockade was put into effect Feb. 18.

"As already stated, merchant vessels had, as a matter of fact, been sunk by a German submarine at the end of January. Before Feb. 4 no vessel carrying food supplies for Germany had been held up by his majesty's government, except on the ground that there was reason to believe the foodstuffs were intended for use of the armed forces of the enemy or the enemy government.

"The decision of his majesty's government to carry out the measures laid down by the order in council was due to the action of the German government in insisting on their submarine blockade.

"This, added to other infractions of international law by Germany, led to British reprisals.

"The Germans state that, in spite of their offer to stop their submarine war in case the starvation plan was given up, Great Britain has taken even more stringent blockade measures. The answer to this is as follows:

"It was not understood from the reply of the German government that they were prepared to abandon the principle of sinking British vessels by submarine. They have refused to abandon the use of mines for offensive purposes on the high seas on any condition. They have committed various other infractions of international law, such as strewing the high seas and trade routes with mines, and British and neutral vessels will continue to run danger from this course whether Germany abandons her submarine blockade or not.

"The Germans represent British merchant vessels generally as armed with guns and say that they repeatedly ram submarines. The answer to this is as follows:

"It is not to be wondered at that merchant vessels, knowing they are liable to be sunk without warning and without any chance being given those on board to save their lives, should take measures for self-defense. With regard to the Lusitania, the vessel was not armed on her last voyage and had not been armed during the whole war.

"The Germans attempt to justify the sinking of the Lusitania by the fact that she had arms and ammunition on board. The presence of contraband on board a neutral vessel does render her liable to capture, but certainly not to destruction with the loss of a large portion of her crew and passengers.

"The Germans maintain that after repeated official and unofficial warnings his majesty's government were responsible for the loss of life, as they considered themselves able to declare that the boat ran no risk and thus 'lightheartedly assume the responsibility for the human lives on board a steamer which, owing to its armament and cargo, is liable to destruction.' The reply thereto is:

"First. His majesty's government never declared the boat ran no risk.

"Second. The fact that the Germans issued their warning shows that the crime was premeditated. They had no more right to murder passengers after warning them than before.

"Third. In spite of their attempts to put the blame on Great Britain, it will tax the ingenuity even of the Germans to explain away the fact that it was a German torpedo, fired by a German seaman from a German submarine that sank the vessel and caused over 1,000 deaths."

GERMAN VERSION OF TORPEDOING.

In Berlin on May 14 this statement was given out:

"From the report received from the submarine which sank the Cunard line steamer Lusitania last Friday the following official version of the incident is published by the admiralty staff under the signature of Admiral Behncke:

"The submarine sighted the steamer, which showed no flag, May 7, at 2:20 o'clock central European time, afternoon, on the southeast coast of Ireland in fine, clear weather.

"At 3:10 o'clock one torpedo was fired at the Lusitania, which hit the starboard side below the captain's bridge. The detonation of the torpedo was followed immediately by a further explosion of extremely strong effect. The ship quickly listed to starboard and began to sink.

"The second explosion must be traced back to the ignition of quantities of ammunition inside the ship."

UNITED STATES AROUSED.

President Wilson, realizing the grave situation created in the relations between the United States and Germany by the sinking of the Lusitania, immediately devoted his whole time to studying all the phases of the problem. Messages began to pour in upon him from every part of the country assuring him that he would have the support of the people in any action he might take. These messages were from individuals, from organizations such as ministers' associations, municipal councils and fraternities, from legislatures and from United States senators and congressmen. May 11 the president and members of the cabinet discussed the Lusitania case and the action to be taken. It was generally agreed that a plan suggested by the president and worked out by him with the assistance of Robert Lansing, counselor of the state department, should be followed. What this plan was will be seen from the official documents on the Lusitania case which are included in the diplomatic correspondence relating to restraints on American commerce. The various American "notes" and the German replies thereto are given in full on another page of this volume.

OTHER LINERS SUNK OR ATTACKED.

The sinking of the Lusitania with the loss of more than 1,000 lives naturally occupies the leading place in the history of the submarine warfare waged by the central powers of Europe against the allies. The destruction of naval vessels without warning was accepted as a matter of course, but sending or attempting to send great ocean liners carrying noncombatant passengers and crews to the bottom without giving those on board a chance to escape aroused a storm of protest and led to a situation which came perilously near involving the United States in the European struggle. Following are brief accounts of the sinking or attempts to sink other ocean liners made by German and Austro-Hungarian submarines:

SINKING OF LINER FALABA.

The Falaba of the Elder line, a steamship of 3,011 tons, left Liverpool for the west coast of Africa Saturday, March 27, and Sunday afternoon, as it was proceeding through St. George's channel, it was chased by a German submarine and was finally overtaken. The captain, according to stories told by survivors, was given five minutes in which to get his passengers, numbering 160, and crew of ninety persons into the boats. Most of the boats had been launched when the submarine fired a torpedo at the Falaba, sinking the liner almost at once. Some of those on board were killed by the explosion and many were carried down with the ship. Several of the boats which had been launched were swamped and the occupants drowned. The fishing boat Eileen Emma rescued 139 of the persons struggling in the water and brought them to Milford Haven. The captain of the Eileen Emma and survivors from the Falaba reported that the German submarine, which was close at hand, made no attempt to save the lives of the passengers and sailors struggling in the water. The total cost of life was 111. One of the victims was Leon C. Thresher, an American citizen.

The accusations made by the survivors were vigorously resented by the Germans in a semi-official statement issued in Berlin April 13. It was claimed that the Falaba attempted to escape and signaled for help while being pursued; that ten minutes were given in which to abandon the ship; that the Falaba was torpedoed only upon the approach of other vessels from which attacks might be expected; that twenty-three minutes elapsed before the vessel sank; that the crew on the Falaba behaved awkwardly in launching the boats, and, finally, that the submarine had no place for passengers and hence could not save lives.

An official inquiry into the Falaba case was begun May 29 before Lord Mersey, president of the board of marine arbitration in London. Solicitor-General Buckmaster, speaking for the board of trade, said in part: "A defenseless, unarmed, undefending vessel, carrying passengers, the Falaba was torpedoed in broad daylight by a German submarine at a distance of not more than 100 yards. * * * The submarine sent a torpedo through the struggling people already in the sea and its crew stood jeering at the dying."

DESTRUCTION OF THE AGUILA.

The Aguilá, a British steamer, was shelled and torpedoed by a German submarine on the morning of March 28, while off the coast of Pembrokeshire at the entrance to St. George's channel. It was reported that the captain was given four minutes to disembark his passengers and crew, but before the time was up the Germans opened fire, killing a woman passenger, the chief engineer and two of the crew. The total loss of life was twenty-six, three of the victims being passengers and the others members of the crew.

ATTEMPT TO SINK THE ORDUNA.

The Cunard liner Orduna, bound from Liverpool to New York with 227 passengers, including twenty-two Americans, was attacked July 9 by a German submarine on the Irish coast some twenty miles from the place where the Lusitania was sunk. One torpedo was fired, but missed the steamship, passing ten feet behind the rudder. The submarine then rose to the surface and fired seven shells, most of which came very close to the Orduna, but without doing any damage. The attack occurred a little before 6 a. m., while the passengers were still in their berths. They were aroused by stewards, provided with life belts and assigned to places in the lifeboats. The officers of the Orduna declared that the attack came without any warning. It was subsequently admitted by the German authorities that one of their submarines had attempted to torpedo the Orduna, but it was claimed that the vessel was trying to escape. They said that the commander of the underwater craft had violated his instructions, which were not to attack any liner, his excuse, being that on account of the weather he was unable to make out the character or nationality of the Orduna.

SINKING OF THE IBERIAN.

The Leyland line steamship Iberian, a vessel of 5,223 tons, was shelled and then torpedoed by a German submarine while off the south coast of Ireland July 31. Six men, three Americans and three Englishmen, were killed by the shell fire, and three Americans and three Englishmen were wounded. The Iberian was bound from Liverpool to Boston, and when hailed by the submarine failed to heed the signals, whereupon it was shelled. After the crew had been given time to disembark the vessel was torpedoed and sunk.

SINKING OF THE ARABIC.

The White Star steamship Arabic, 15,801 registered tonnage, bound from Liverpool to New York, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine at 9:30 a. m. Aug. 19, 1915, at a point forty-seven miles south from Galley Head on the coast of Ireland, or only about forty miles from the place where the Lusitania was sunk May 7. There were on board 423 persons, of whom 181 were passengers and 242 members of the crew. Through the prompt launching of lifeboats and distribution of life belts all except forty-four were rescued. The dead included eighteen passengers and twenty-five members of the crew.

Capt. William Finch of the Arabic gave the following account of the sinking of his ship:

"We were forty-seven miles south of Galley Head at 9:30 in the morning when I perceived the steamer Dunsley in difficulty. Going toward her, I observed a torpedo coming for my ship, but could not discern a submarine. The torpedo struck 100 feet from the stern, making terrible havoc of the hull. The vessel began to settle immediately and sank in about eight minutes. My order from the bridge about getting the boats launched was obeyed promptly. Two of the boats capsized. We had taken every precaution while in the danger zone. There were plenty of life belts on deck and the boats were ready for immediate launching."

All of the survivors agreed in saying that no warning of any kind was given. The assistant purser of the Arabic said that the torpedo hit near the engine room and the boilers of the steamer exploded, that accounting for the rapidity with which the vessel went down. The survivors, who were in the boats, were picked up by the steamers Primrose and Mongolian, which brought them to Queenstown. Many of them were scantily clad and some were suffering from injuries. Fine weather and a calm sea contributed to the efforts to save life. The officers and crew remained calm throughout.

There were twenty-one American passengers aboard the Arabic, but only two were drowned. These were Mrs. Josephine L. Brugliere, who had been living in Europe for some time, and Dr. Edmund F. Woods of Janesville, Wis.

No formal notes were sent by the American government to Germany regarding the sinking of the Arabic, but that the matter was regarded as one seriously endangering the good relations of the United States and Germany was impressed upon the Berlin authorities by Ambassador von Bernstorff. After an investigation of the facts Germany disavowed the act of the submarine commander and offered to pay an indemnity for the American lives lost. (See "The Arabic Case" under the caption "American Diplomatic Correspondence.")

SINKING OF THE HESPERIAN.

The Allan line steamer Hesperian, bound from Liverpool to Montreal, was disabled by an external explosion when seventy miles southwest of Fastnet off the coast of Ireland about 8:30 p. m. Sept. 4. Capt. Main ordered the passengers and crew into the boats and wireless calls for assistance were sent out. Several vessels responded and those in the lifeboats were picked up and taken to Queenstown, where they arrived the next morning. These declared that the Hesperian had been torpedoed without warning. Twenty-two members of the crew and ten passengers were lost, either through the explosion or by drowning when one of the lifeboats spilled its occupants into the sea as it was being lowered. The ship remained afloat until the next morning, when it sank. The Germans maintained that they had no submarines in the vicinity and considered it most probable that the Hesperian had struck a mine. Fragments of steel picked up on the deck of the vessel were brought to America and submitted to experts in the navy department, who said that they belonged to a torpedo and not to a mine.

The Hesperian was a vessel of 6,124 tons net. It was 485 feet long, with a beam of sixty feet and a depth of hold of thirty feet.

SINKING OF THE ANCONA.

The Italian line steamship Ancona was shelled, torpedoed and sunk in the Mediterranean by a submarine flying the Austrian flag about noon on Sunday, Nov. 7, 1915, with the loss of 206 lives. The vessel was steaming westward between the coasts of Sardinia and Tunis, bound from Naples to New York with 507 passengers and crew aboard, when an attack was made. The captain and many of the passengers said that the Ancona was fired at from a considerable distance by a submarine and that the vessel stopped at once. The shelling continued, disabling the ship and killing some of those on board. There was a panic among the passengers on account of the firing which made the work of rescue difficult, particularly as shots continued to fly about after the lifeboats had been launched. It was even charged that shells were directed at the small boats. The result was that only 239 out of the 507 persons on board were rescued. These were taken by vessels, which came up in response to a wireless call, to Bizerta and other points on the coast of Tunis. Most of the victims, as well as the rescued, were intending emigrants from the south of Europe, but there were also a number of well-to-do persons, including several American citizens, among whom was Dr. Cecile L. Griel of New York city. She was rescued, but some twenty-four others claiming American citizenship were lost.

It was claimed by the Austro-Hungarian government that the Ancona was trying to escape when it was fired upon, that no shots were fired when it had come to a stop and that there was no truth in the charge that people in the lifeboats were fired upon. The commander of the Austrian submarine attributed the heavy loss of life to the panic among the Ancona's crew and passengers, who had been given nearly an hour in which to escape.

The Ancons was a ship of 8,210 tons. It was built in Belfast in 1908.

AMERICAN ANCONA NOTE.

(Note made public Dec. 13.)

Secretary Lansing to Ambassador Penfield in Vienna:

Department of State, Washington, D. C., Dec. 6, 1915.—Please deliver a note to the minister of foreign affairs, textually as follows:

Reliable information obtained from American and other survivors who were passengers on the steamship Ancona shows that on Nov. 7 a submarine flying the Austro-Hungarian flag fired a solid shot toward the steamship; that thereupon the Ancona attempted to escape, but, being overhauled by the submarine, she stopped; that after a brief period and before the crew and passengers were all able to take to the boats the submarine fired a number of shells at the vessel and finally torpedoed and sank her while there were yet many persons on board, and that by gunfire and foundering of the vessel a large number of persons lost their lives or were seriously injured, among whom were citizens of the United States.

The public statement of the Austro-Hungarian admiralty has been brought to the attention of the government of the United States and received careful consideration. This statement substantially confirms the principal declaration of the survivors, as it admits that the Ancona, after being shelled, was torpedoed and sunk while persons were still on board.

The Austro-Hungarian government has been advised, through the correspondence which has passed between the United States and Germany, of the attitude of the government of the United States as to the use of submarines in attacking vessels of commerce and the acquiescence of Germany in that attitude, yet with full knowledge on the part of the Austro-Hungarian government of the views of the government of the United States as expressed in no uncertain terms to the ally of Austria-Hungary, the commander of the submarine which attacked the Ancona failed to put in a place of safety the crew and passengers of the vessel, which they purposed to destroy because, it is presumed, of the impossibility of taking it into port as a prize of war.

The government of the United States considers that the commander violated the principles of international law and of humanity by shelling and torpedoing the Ancona before the persons on board had been put in a place of safety or even given sufficient time to leave the vessel. The conduct of the commander can only be characterized as wanton slaughter of defenseless noncombatants, since, at the time when the vessel was shelled and torpedoed, she was not, it appears, resisting or attempting to escape; and no other reason is sufficient to excuse such an attack, not even the possibility of rescue.

The government of the United States is forced, therefore, to conclude either that the commander of the submarine acted in violation of his instructions, or that the imperial and royal government failed to issue instructions to the commanders of its submarines in accordance with the law of nations and the principles of humanity. The government of the United States is unwilling to believe the latter alternative and to credit the Austro-Hungarian government with an intention to permit its submarines to destroy the lives of helpless men, women and children. It prefers to believe that the commander of the submarine committed this outrage without authority and contrary to the general or special instructions which he had received.

As the good relations of the two countries must rest upon a common regard for law and humanity, the government of the United States cannot be expected to do otherwise than to demand that the imperial and royal government denounce the sinking of the Ancona as an illegal and indefensible act; that the officer who perpetrated the deed be punished; and that reparation be paid by the payment of an indemnity be made for the citizens of the United States who were killed or injured by the attack on the vessel.

The government of the United States expects that the Austro-Hungarian government, appreciating the gravity of the case, will accede to its demand promptly, and it rests this expectation on the belief that the Austro-Hungarian government will not sanction or defend an act which is condemned by the world as inhumane and barbarous, which is abhorrent to all civilized nations, and which has caused the death of innocent American citizens.

LANSING.

AMERICAN SHIPS SUNK OR ATTACKED.

The first American ship to be sunk in the war between the European powers was the Willam P. Frye, which fell a prey to the German armed cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich on the high seas Jan. 28, 1915. Full details of that affair will be found in the account of the internment of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich and in the diplomatic correspondence given elsewhere in this issue of The Almanac and Year-Book.

The second American ship to be destroyed was the steamer Evelyn, cotton laden and bound from New York for Bremen. It struck a mine in the North sea off Borkum island Feb. 19 and sank with the loss of one life, that of a fireman named A. Garcia.

The American steamer Carib was sunk by a mine off Borkum island at the mouth of the Ems river Feb. 22. Three lives were lost. It was claimed by the German government that both the Evelyn and Carib were outside the zone of safety prescribed by the admiralty. No action was taken by the American government.

April 2, a few hours after it had left Bremen, Germany, the American steamer Greenbrier, bound for New York, was sunk by a mine. There was no loss of life.

AEROPLANE ATTACK ON CUSHING.

The American oil tank steamer Cushing, Capt. Lars L. Herland, bound from Philadelphia for Rotterdam, was attacked April 28 by a German aeroplane which aimed three bombs at it, one striking the rail of the vessel. The Cushing was about twenty-five miles from Antwerp and eight miles from the North Hinder lightship in the North sea when the attack occurred. According to the story told by Capt. Herland on his return to Philadelphia May 19, the German airman swept in narrowing circles over the tanker, apparently trying to get over the funnel. The first and second bombs fell in the water, while the third hit the starboard rail. It was about 7 o'clock in the evening, but it was light and the airman could have had no difficulty in seeing the words "Cushing, New York, U. S. A." painted on each side of the vessel in letters eight feet high and the American flags flying at the masthead and the taffrail.

Minister van Dyke at The Hague reported the matter to the state department in Washington and it was made the subject of diplomatic correspondence between the United States and Germany. It was mentioned in the American note on the sinking of the Lusitania.

AMERICAN SHIP GULFIGHT TORPEDOED.

The American oil tank steamer Gulfight, which sailed from Port Arthur, Tex., April 10, for Rouen, France, was torpedoed May 1 at noon when off the Scilly islands by a German submarine. Capt. Alfred Gunther died of heart failure as a result of the shock, while Charles C. Short, wireless operator, and Chapanta, a seaman, jumped overboard and were drowned. The remainder of the crew were saved by British patrol boats, which towed the Gulfight to Crow sound, Scilly, where it anchored, though partly submerged. Second Officer Paul Bower said that the ship was torpedoed without warning and in daylight, though it was flying the American flag.

ATTACK ON THE NEBRASKAN.

The American steamship Nebraskan had been chartered to the White Star line and when the charter had expired was returning to the United States to carry coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts for the United States navy. When off the coast of Ireland on the evening of May 25 the vessel was torpedoed by a German submarine. The attack occurred after sundown, when the American flag had been hauled down, as is the custom. The ship was able to return to Liverpool under the convoy of an English ship. No one was seriously hurt by the torpedo explosion. The German foreign office, after an investigation of the affair, sent a note to Ambassador Gerard expressing regret for the occurrence and offering to make compensation. (See "American Diplomatic Correspondence.")

LEELANAW TORPEDOED.

The American steamer Leelanaw, bound from Archangel, Russia, to Belfast with a cargo of flax, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine near the Orkney islands July 25. The crew was given due warning to leave the vessel, which was sunk for having contraband on board. The officers and sailors were carried by the submarine to within a short distance of the Orkney islands, to which they proceeded safely in their own boats. No official action was taken in this case.

SEIZURE AND DETENTION OF AMERICAN SHIPS.

Many vessels flying the American flag were seized and brought before the prize courts, while others were merely detained and after investigation permitted to depart. The British were trying to exclude foodstuffs and munitions of war from Germany and most of the vessels interrupted in their voyages were taken into English ports. Only a few were detained by the French and Germans. The diplomatic correspondence given elsewhere in this volume deals very largely with seizures and detentions of this kind, but some details of two cases which attracted particular attention are given herewith.

THE DACIA.

Early in January, 1915, Edward N. Breitung of Chicago, who had bought the Hamburg-American steamer Dacia and had it transferred from German to American registry, loaded the vessel with cotton and then asked the state department if the ship would be stopped by the British in case the cargo was taken to Rotterdam instead of to Bremen, as originally intended. The Washington officials brought the matter to the attention of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, who referred the question to the home government. Jan. 19 the state department was notified that Britain would not consent to allow the Dacia to proceed to Rotterdam under safe conduct, as it was felt that it would establish a precedent, the result of which would be many similar purchases of German ships by American citizens and the reopening of the German trade routes. Doubt was expressed as to the genuineness of the transfer to American registry of the Dacia, the belief being that the nominal buyer was acting for German principals.

The Dacia sailed from Galveston, Tex., Jan. 20 for Rotterdam. It arrived at Norfolk, Va., Feb. 7 and departed Feb. 11. When the Dacia was approaching the English channel Feb. 27 it was intercepted by a French cruiser and taken to Brest, France, where it was held to await action by a prize court. It was explained by the French authorities that international law did not recognize the purchase by neutrals of ships belonging to the belligerents with the object of evading the consequences of a state of war. The cotton was subsequently taken over by the French government and the Dacia sailed from Brest May 24 to discharge its cargo at Havre.

THE WILHELMINA.

The American steamship Wilhelmina, loaded with a cargo of foodstuffs valued at $200,000, shipped by the W. L. Green Commission company of St. Louis to a representative of the firm in Hamburg, and destined for the civil population of Germany, left New York harbor Jan. 22, 1915, for the North sea port. The vessel encountered heavy gales and on account of the damages sustained was compelled to put into Falmouth, England, for repairs. After the Wilhelmina had begun its voyage Germany issued a decree taking over grain and flour so as to conserve the nation's food supply. This caused Britain to place all foodstuffs destined for Germany on the contraband list, thus making cargoes of grain and other food products liable to seizure and confiscation. The English authorities, therefore, detained the Wilhelmina at Falmouth until it could be determined what disposition should be made of the cargo. Owing to the representations of the American government and to the fact that the ship had sailed before the German decree was issued. It was finally decided, April 12, to make an exception of the case and not to throw the cargo into a prize court. It was announced that Britain would pay for the foodstuffs and for damages occasioned by the delay. The sum finally awarded was $430,000, which the owners considered satisfactory. The original value of the cargo was estimated at $180,000.

PACKING HOUSE PRODUCTS SEIZED.

Cargoes of meat products valued at more than $15,000,000, belonging to Chicago packers, were condemned Sept. 15, 1915, by the British prize court in London as contraband and declared forfeited to the crown. The cargoes, which consisted largely of canned meats and lard, were in four Norwegian ships seized by the British in November, 1914, and were consigned to ports in Norway and Denmark. It was held by the prize court that the goods were intended to find their way to Germany for the eventual use of German naval and military forces. The finding of the court was declared by counsel for the packers to be in violation of international law and the case was appealed. It was reported Nov. 30 that the British government might reopen the "packers' cases," as there had been a conflict of opinion and the authorities were anxious that the rights of all American shippers should be safeguarded while the blockade continued. Strong efforts were made by interested persons on both sides of the Atlantic to settle the matter by private negotiations and the American state department in Washington did not intervene specifically in the packers' cases, though it was very active in maintaining the general rights of American shippers, as will be seen from the diplomatic correspondence relating to restraints of trade.

GERMAN WAR VESSELS INTERNED IN THE UNITED STATES.PRINZ EITEL FRIEDRICH.

The German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, after a career of about six months as a commerce destroyer, arrived at Newport News, Va., March 10, 1915, seeking repairs and supplies. It had on board the officers, crews and passengers, numbering all told 342, of the vessels it had recently destroyed. Its master commander, Max Thierichsen, admitted that he had sunk eight merchant ships in the Atlantic, of which three were British, three French, one Russian and one American. The British vessels were the sailing ship Invercoe, sunk Feb. 12, 1915; the steamship Mary Ada Short, sunk Feb. 18, and the steamship Willerby, sunk Feb. 20. The French vessels were the steamship Florida, sunk Feb. 19, and the sailing ship Pierre Loti, sunk Jan. 27. The Russian vessel was the sailing ship Isabel Browne, sunk Jan. 27.

The American victim of the converted cruiser's activity was the large, square rigged sailing ship William P. Frye, owned by Arthur Sewall & Co. of Bath, Me., and having as master Capt. H. H. Kiehne. It sailed from Seattle, Wash., Nov. 6, 1914, with a cargo of 5,200 long tons of wheat, clearing for Queenstown, Ireland, for orders. When becalmed on the south Atlantic Feb. 27, 1915, it was overhauled by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, the commander of which declared the wheat to be contraband of war and ordered it to be thrown overboard. He sent some of his own crew to assist in the work. This proved to be a slow affair and on the 28th the vessel, after Capt. Kiehne and his crew of thirty-one men had left it, was sunk. The ship with its supplies was valued at $200,000 and the cargo at $600,000. The hull was insured for $11,550 by the government risk bureau. The Frye had been described as the "finest vessel sailing under the American flag," and its destruction under the circumstances caused much concern to the authorities in Washington. [The notes exchanged between the American and German governments concerning the William P. Frye case will be found under American Diplomatic Correspondence, this volume. See index.]

Formal notification was given Commander Thierichsen by Norman R. Hamilton, collector of customs at Newport News, that in accordance with article 12, convention 13, The Hague, 1907, he would be expected to take his ship beyond United States jurisdiction unless a further period of time was proved to be necessary to put on board fuel or stores or to make repairs. He was given permission to land the captured passengers, officers and seamen, after they had been passed by the immigration authorities as eligible for entrance into the United States. In addition he was requested to furnish a signed statement of the circumstances of the sinking of the ship William P. Frye or of any other American ship destroyed by him. March 11 the German commander took his ship into dry dock at Newport News, after having released the prisoners with the exception of those rejected by the immigration officials. He announced that as soon as his vessel had been placed in seaworthy condition he would leave. At the executive mansion in Washington it was announced that a most searching investigation of the sinking of the Frye would be made.

Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, gave formal notice to the state department March 15 that the Prinz Eitel Friedrich was a German war vessel and asked that it be permitted to make necessary repairs at Newport News, Va. Permission was given, repairs were made, coal and provisions taken aboard and the ship was ready to proceed to sea. On the evening of April 7 the collector of the port notified Commander Thierichsen that the time limit for his stay would expire at midnight and that he must leave American water by 4 a. m. April 8. The commander then said that he had decided to allow his ship to be interned, as the relief which he had expected had not come and with enemy cruisers watching the entrance to the bay it would be impossible to make a dash for the open sea with any hope of success. April 8 the vessel was duly interned in the Norfolk navy yard.

Inspection of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich by naval officers, who filed their report March 20, resulted in the notice to the ship's commander that his vessel would be given fourteen working days for repairs. This brought the date to midnight of April 6. An additional twenty-four hours was given Commander Thierichsen to depart from United States waters or as an alternative to have his ship interned.

KRONPRINZ WILHELM.

The German converted cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, after a career of eight months at sea, in the course of which it sank fourteen merchant vessels, entered the harbor at Newport News, Va., April 11. Its commander, Lieut. Capt. Thierfelder, applied for 300 tons of coal and supplies for three days, as his ship was nearly out of both. He also asked for time to survey his vessel to see if repairs were needed. Collector N. R. Hamilton gave him permission to take on 150 tons of coal and the supplies asked for, but notified him that unless the vessel was in need of repairs it must leave the port within twenty-four hours. The Kronprinz Wilhelm had on board sixty-one sailors taken from British merchant ships and these men were set at liberty the following day. Sixty-six members of the crew and prisoners, ill with beri-beri from lack of fresh vegetables, were taken ashore to a hospital.

The Kronprinz Wilhelm, a North German Lloyd liner of 14,908 tons, left New York harbor Aug. 3, 1914, and when off the Bermudas met the cruiser Karlsruhe, from which it received two three inch guns, which were mounted in the bow of the ship. Later it took two four inch guns from a British steamer. The Karlsruhe also gave the liner as its commander Lieut.-Capt. Thierfelder and seventeen junior officers and men. Then the Kronprinz Wilhelm began its career as a commerce raider, its first victim being the British ship Indian Prince, which it sank in the south Atlantic Sept. 4, 1914. Of the other thirteen ships destroyed by it eight were British, four French and one Norwegian. Their names and the dates on which they were sunk were: La Correntina—Oct. 7, 1914. Union (bark)—Nov. 11, 1914. Anne de Bretagne (bark)—Nov. 21, 1914. Bellevue—Dec. 12, 1914. Mont Agel—Dec. 14, 1914. Hemisphere—Dec. 28, 1914. Potaro—Jan. 10, 1915. Highland Brae—Jan. 14, 1915. Wilfred M. (schooner)—Jan. 14, 1915. Samantha (Norwegian bark)—Feb. 3, 1915. Guadeloupe—Feb. 23, 1915. Tamar—March 24, 1915. Coleby—March 28, 1915.

Capt. Thierfelder, after an examination of his ship, asked formally for three weeks' time in which to make the necessary repairs. April 26 he formally notified Collector Hamilton that he had decided to intern the vessel until the end of the war. It was understood that he took this action because some sixty of his sailors were laid up with beri-beri.

Six officers of the Kronprinz Wilhelm bought a yacht called the Eclipse in October, 1915, and sailed away in violation of their parole. They were Heinrich Rudebusch, Heinrich Hoffman, Walter Fischer, Wilhelm Forstreuter, Julius Lustfeld and Erich Bierman. Three officers, Lieut. Zur See Koch, Dr. Krueger Kroneck and Dr. Nulte, were also found to be missing from the interned cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

OTHER GERMAN WARSHIPS INTERNED.

The German gunboat Geier was interned at Honolulu Nov. 8, 1914, with the German steamship Locksun, which had been furnishing the German sea raiders with coal.

The British ship Farn, which had been captured by the German cruiser Karlsruhe and placed under command of German officers to act as a collier or fleet tender, was interned at San Juan, P. R., Jan. 25, 1915.

The German ship Odenwald attempted to leave San Juan, P. R., March 21, 1915, but was stopped by warning shots from the harbor forts and compelled to return.

PLOTS IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the course of 1915 many attempts were made in the United States to interfere with the manufacture of munitions of war by American firms, to destroy ships carrying such munitions and other supplies to belligerent countries, and in various ways to assist by illegal acts, the belligerents in Europe. This work was done in some cases by the official representatives of foreign powers and in others by fanatics or self-appointed agents. In certain instances the men arrested claimed to be in the secret service of one of the nations at war and that what they did or attempted to do was with the sanction of their respective governments. Some of the agents confined themselves to mere encouragement of strikes in munition plants or to efforts to influence public sentiment against the sale of ammunition, rifles and cannon to the nations at war, but others worked in secret, and by means of incendiarism and bombs caused fires and explosions resulting not only in the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property but in the loss of a considerable number of lives. In most of these cases the perpetrators of the outrages escaped detection and arrest. Possibly in a few instances the fires and explosions were accidental, but the frequency with which such affairs occurred proved that they were the result of criminal plotting. A list of some of the more serious of these fires and explosions follows:

Jan. 15—Buckthorne plant of John A. Roebling at Trenton, N. J., burned; loss, $1,500,000.

March 6—Two explosions in Du Pont plant at Haskell, N. J.; five men killed.

April 1—Five persons killed by explosion in plant of Equitable Powder company at Alton, Ill.

May 12—Guncoiton storehouse of Anderson Chemical plant at Wallington, N. J., wrecked; three killed.

July 13—Mixing building of United Safety Powder company at Jeffersontown, Ky., wrecked by explosion; three killed.

Aug. 16—Simanahoning (Pa.) plant of Aetna Explosives company scene of explosion; five employees killed.

Aug. 23—Two Du Pont powder mills near Wilmington, Del., destroyed; two killed.

Aug. 30—Shrapnel plant of E. J. Dodd company, Baltimore, Md., burned.

Nov. 10—No. 4 machine shop of Bethlehem Steel company at South Bethlehem, Pa., burned; loss about $5,000,000.

The foregoing are only a few of the many occurrences of this kind reported. There were instances in which unsuccessful attempts were made to wreck trains carrying explosives or munitions of war and in many cases efforts to burn manufacturing plants were frustrated by the vigilance of watchmen or the bungling of the plotters.

BRIDGE DYNAMITING CASE.

Between 1 and 2 o'clock on the morning of Feb. 2, 1915, an attempt was made to destroy the international railroad bridge over the St. Croix river between Vanceboro, Me., and New Brunswick, Canada. But little damage was done by the dynamite or nitroglycerin charge used and traffic was not seriously interrupted. Within a few hours after the explosion a man named Werner Horn, claiming to be a German reservist with the rank of captain, was arrested in Vanceboro. He admitted that he had tried to blow up the bridge on the ground that his country was at war with Canada and claimed that as a political offender he could not be extradited and taken back to New Brunswick for trial. His story was that the arrangement was made in New York by persons he refused to name and that he had an accomplice in the person of an Irishman who had furnished him with the explosive. The bridge which he tried to destroy is a three-span structure, a connecting link between the Maine Central and the Canadian Pacific tracks and is on the through route connecting Montreal with the ports of St. John and Halifax. The prisoner claimed that by interfering with the carrying of supplies and munitions over this line he would be helping the German cause.

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, made application Feb. 3 at the state department in Washington for the extradition to Canada of Horn on the charge of "attempted destruction of human life." While the international proceedings were pending Horn was held in Vanceboro on a warrant issued by a local justice charging him with defacing and injuring buildings. The damage, it was claimed, was caused by the shock of the explosion at the bridge. Feb. 4 Horn was sentenced to thirty days in jail at Machias, Me., and March 7 he became a federal prisoner on the charge of illegally transporting explosives from New York to Vanceboro. March 18 he was arraigned before United States Commissioner Charles H. Reid in Banzer, Me., and on the following day the commissioner announced that the indictment warrant was sufficient basis for holding the prisoner to the United States court in Boston for trial. The motion of the defendant's counsel, Joseph H. O'Donnell, for the release of Horn on the ground that he was a belligerent engaged in an act of war and not amenable to the courts of the United States was denied.

FRANK HOLT'S EXPLOITS.

Frank Holt, also known as Erich Muentner, a scholar and teacher, attempted to blow up the capitol building in Washington, D. C., July 2, 1915, and on the following day tried to kill J. Pierpont Morgan, the financier, at his home in Glencove, L. I. Both attempts were failures; the damage to the capitol was slight, and though Mr. Morgan was shot twice the wounds proved not to be serious. The motive alleged in each case was to put an end to the war in Europe. Holt, who was arrested at the Morgan residence and taken to the Mineola (L. I.) jail, pleaded not guilty to a charge of assault with intent at malicious killing. Further proceedings were continued to July 7, but on the night of July 6 Holt committed suicide by throwing himself to the ground floor of the jail twenty feet below his cell. Some hours previously he had tried to take his life by opening the artery in one of his wrists with the metal on the head of a lead pencil.

EXPLOSION IN CAPITOL.

The explosion in the capitol building in Washington occurred at 11:40 p. m. in the reception room adjoining the office of the vice-president of the United States and the senate chamber. The damage done consisted chiefly of broken doors, windows and glass, the total loss not exceeding $600. No one was injured, though a guard was thrown from his chair by the force of the explosion. Holt after his arrest said the bomb he used consisted of three sticks of dynamite, several matches and some sulphuric acid. "I did not want to hurt anybody," he said. "I just wanted to call the attention of the country to the terrible murders committed in Europe." In a letter which he mailed to the Washington newspapers and signed "R. Pearce," Holt declared: "This is the exclamation point to my appeal for peace." Explaining his motive, he wrote: "We get rich by the exportation of explosives. But ought we to enrich ourselves when it means the untold suffering and death of millions of our brethren?" Another paragraph read: "By the way, don't put this on the Germans or on Bryan. I am an old fashioned American with a conscience."

TRIES TO KILL J. P. MORGAN.

Holt immediately after the explosion took a train for New York city and the next morning proceeded to Glencove, L. I., where he hired an automobile to drive him to the Morgan residence. Forcing an entrance by pointing two revolvers at the butler, he encountered Mr. Morgan on the second floor and fired two shots at him, both bullets taking effect in his hip. Holt was immediately overpowered by employees in the house and was turned over to the police. Mr. Morgan was confined to his bed for a few days, but recovered quickly from his wounds. In a statement made soon after his arrest Holt said:

"My motive in coming here was to try to force Mr. Morgan to use his influence with the manufacturers of munitions in the United States and with the millionaires who are financing the war loans to have an embargo put on shipments of war munitions so as to relieve the American people from complicity in the death of thousands of our European brothers. I could not go from manufacturer to manufacturer myself, but I thought that Mr. Morgan's banking connections would make it more easy for him to accomplish this. I have not been influenced to do this by anybody else."

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, who was breakfasting with Mr. Morgan at the time of the attempted assassination, suspected that Holt was incited to his acts by German agents in the United States who had perfected a gigantic plot to blow up ammunition factories and trains and ships carrying war supplies. No direct proof of such a conspiracy was forthcoming, but from the fact that explosions did occur in some of the ammunition factories and on vessels carrying war supplies it was held in certain quarters that there was at least a basis for suspicion. Holt, it was found, had bought 200 sticks of 40 per cent dynamite from a company manufacturing explosives, while 134 sticks of 60 per cent dynamite were recovered in a room in New York city where he had hidden them. It was inferred that the explosives not accounted for had been used in the manufacture of bombs which had been placed where they would do the most damage. Then came the revelation by Holt's wife in Dallas, Tex., that she had received a letter from him telling of his plans to sink certain vessels. "A steamer leaving New York for Liverpool should sink, God willing, on 7th (of July). It is the Philadelphia or the Savony (Savonia), but I am not sure, as these left on the 2d or 3d." These vessels were reached by wireless and were searched for bombs, but nothing was found. An explosion, however, occurred on the steamer Minnehaha on the date named as the vessel was on its way from New York to Liverpool with 45,000 tons of munitions and foodstuffs. A fire was caused in the hold, but it was in a compartment distant from the ammunition and was extinguished without doing much damage after the ship had put into Halifax harbor. The fact was made public July 13 that in April and May ineffectual attempts had been made to destroy by means of fire bombs the following vessels: Touraine, Devon City, Lord Erne, Cressington, Samland, Lord Downshire, Kirkoswald, Strath-tay and Bankdale. All arrived safely at their destinations.

Inquiry into the life of Frank Holt showed that he was a man of about 44 years of age and that he had been a teacher of French and German. He was graduated from the University of Chicago under the name of Erich Muentner in 1889, and for several years taught German in the Harvard school, Chicago. In 1902 he married Leona Krembs of Chicago. After a year as instructor in the University of Kansas Muentner entered Harvard university as a student of philology and as an instructor. Mrs. Muentner died in 1904 under circumstances strongly pointing to poisoning from arsenic and a coroner's verdict charged the husband with murder. Search was made for him, but he could not be found and it was not learned until after his death that he had successively been a teacher or professor, under the name of Frank Holt, in the Polytechnic college, Fort Worth, Tex., the University of Oklahoma, the Vanderbilt university, Emory and Henry college, Cornell university and the Southern Methodist university in Dallas, Tex. In Fort Worth Holt or Muentner met and married Leonora Sensabaugh and in 1915 was appointed professor of languages in the Southern Methodist university in Dallas, Tex. At the University of Chicago it was understood that he was of German birth, but after his arrest he claimed to be American born and that his ancestors were French and German.

The firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in New York city was appointed fiscal agent for the allies early in the war.

ALLEGED BOMB PLOTTERS ARRESTED.

Federal secret service officers, assisted by the "bomb squad" of the New York police department, arrested on Oct. 24, near Weehawken, N. J., two Germans who were testing explosives in a secluded wood on the western slope of the Palisades. One of them gave the name of Robert Fay and said that he was a lieutenant in the German army. He confessed that he came to New York at the instance of the German secret service to develop means of blowing up munition ships leaving New York for Europe.

The other man was his brother-in-law, Walter Scholz. Four other men were arrested a little later on evidence which was laid before the federal grand jury in New York city. Nov. 8 that body found indictments against Robert Fay, Walter Scholz, Max Breitung, nephew of a Michigan capitalist; Edward Bronkhorst, a mining engineer who was alleged to have provided Fay with explosives; Paul Daeché and Dr. Herbert Kienzie, alleged accomplices.

The indictments contained two counts each, charging conspiracy to blow up vessels to the detriment of the owners of the vessels and of the cargoes, and, secondly, to the detriment of the underwriter of insurance on the vessels and cargoes. The case had not come to trial when this record closed. The German government, it may be added, denied that there was such a man as Robert Fay in the German army and said that nothing was known of him or his doings.

CHARGES AGAINST CONSULS.

It was charged by Dr. Joseph Gorica, formerly connected with the Austro-Hungarian consular service, that every Austro-Hungarian consul in the United States was the center of a hotbed of propaganda for the destruction of munitions, factories and ships. This the men implicated denied with much emphasis.

Charles C. Crowley, a private detective, was arrested in San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 26, charged with plotting to dynamite ships carrying munitions to the allies. His attorney said he was an investigator in the employ of the German consulate, but denied that he had anything to do with dynamiting plots.

STEAMSHIP MEN ON TRIAL.

Karl Buezn, Adolph Hochmeister, Joseph Poppinghaus and George Koetter, officials of the Hamburg-American line, were placed on trial in New York in November on the charge of conspiracy to deceive and defraud the United States by dispatching ships with supplies to German cruisers at the beginning of the war. In this work, it was alleged by several witnesses, Capt. K. Boy-Ed, German naval attaché, with headquarters at the German embassy in Washington, D. C., played a leading part. Roger B. Wood, assistant United States district attorney, said the government would show that the "defendants rode roughshod over the laws and treaties of the United States as contemptuously as if those laws and treaties had been mere scraps of paper."

William Rand, counsel for the defendants, said that his clients in sending certain vessels to meet German cruisers in the Atlantic and furnishing them with supplies were acting on legitimate orders which came to them from Germany.

"We are willing to admit that $2,000,000 of German money was spent in chartering and supplying vessels for relief of German warships," Mr. Rand said. "But, admitting the facts, we do not admit the intent to deceive or defraud, as charged in the indictment."

DR. DERNBURG'S AMERICAN MISSION.

Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former colonial secretary in the German foreign office, was among a number of Germans who through the winter of 1914-1915 and the spring of 1915 were actively engaged in presenting the German side of the European war to their fellow countrymen and others in the United States. He carried on his campaign by means of speeches at banquets and other social gatherings, interviews and letters in the newspapers. He was given a respectful hearing, as it was generally understood that he represented the views of Emperor William, though it was denied that he had any official status, and no objection was made to his presence in the country until after the Lusitania affair caused American public opinion to crystallize in opposition to the sinking of unarmed merchantmen, neutral or belligerent, by German submarines without giving passengers and crews a chance to escape with their lives.

In a formal statement issued in Cleveland, O., May 8, the day after the Lusitania was torpedoed and sunk, Dr. Dernburg justified the action on the ground that the vessel was a warship of the British government engaged in carrying ammunition and that persons taking passage on her, in the face of the warnings given in the German note to England in February and the advertisements inserted in the newspapers by the German embassy in Washington, did so at their own peril. This statement attracted wide public attention and was noted with displeasure by government officials in Washington. Suggestions were made that he be excluded from America on the ground that he was making assertions likely to create dissensions among citizens of the United States. It was also made manifest in other ways that his departure from the country was desired.

May 15 it was announced that he had made plans to leave the country of his own initiative. He sailed June 12 for Norway on his way to Berlin. After a brief detention at Kirkwall, Orkney Islands, he proceeded to the German capital, which he reached June 27.

RECALL OF AMBASSADOR DUMBA.

James J. F. Archibald, an American war correspondent, traveling on an American passport, was detained by the British naval authorities at Falmouth, England, when he arrived there as a passenger on the steamship Rotterdam, Aug. 30, 1915. He was known as a man of strong pro-German sympathies and for that reason his baggage was searched with the result that a number of important official and unofficial documents came to light which caused much embarrassment and trouble, not only to Mr. Archibald, but to the persons who had placed the documents in his care. Among the papers was the following letter written by Dr. Constantin Theodor Dumba and addressed to Baron Stephen Burian, the Austro-Hungarian minister of foreign affairs. Translated it read:

"New York, Aug. 20, 1915.

"My Lord: Yesterday evening Consul-General von Nuber received the inclosed aide memoire from the chief editor of the locally-known paper, Szabadsag, after a previous conference with him and in pursuance of his proposals to arrange for strikes in the Bethlehem Schwab steel and munitions war factory, and also in the middle west.

Copyright, Harris & Ewing.

"Dr. Archibald, who is well known to your lordship, leaves to-day at 12 o'clock on board the Rotterdam for Berlin and Vienna. I take this rare and safe opportunity to warmly recommend the proposal to your lordship's favorable consideration.

"It is my impression that we can disorganize and hold up for months, if not entirely prevent, the manufacture of munitions in Bethlehem and the middle west, which, in the opinion of the German military attaché, is of great importance and amply outweighs the expenditure of money involved.

"But even if strikes do not come off, it is probable that we should extort under the pressure of the crisis more favorable conditions of labor for our poor, downtrodden fellow countrymen. In Bethlehem these white slaves are now working for twelve hours a day and seven days a week. All weak persons succumb and become consumptives.

"So far as German workmen are found among the skilled hands, a means of leaving will be provided for them.

"Besides this, a private German registry office has been established, which provides employment for persons who have voluntarily given up their places, and is already working well. They will also join and the widest support is assured me.

"I beg your excellency to be so good as to inform me with reference to this letter by wireless telegraphy, replying whether you agree."

"DUMBA.
"His excellency, Count Burian, minister for foreign affairs, Vienna."

RECALL ASKED BY CABLE.

The letter was brought to the attention of the state department in Washington and was laid before President Wilson for his attention. It was made public Sept. 4 through cable dispatches from London to American newspapers. The Austro-Hungarian ambassador called on Secretary Lansing and explained that in advising Austro-Hungarian subjects that if they worked in factories turning out war supplies to be delivered to the allies they would be guilty of treason, and if they returned to their country they would be tried and punished, he was merely carrying out the instructions of his government. His explanation was not satisfactory and Frederic Courtland Penfield, the American ambassador in Vienna, was instructed by cable Sept. 8 to deliver the following note to the Austro-Hungarian foreign office:

"Mr. Constantin Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador at Washington, has admitted that he proposed to his government plans to instigate strikes in American manufacturing plants engaged in the production of munitions of war. The information reached this government through a copy of a letter of the ambassador to his government. The bearer was an American citizen named Archibald, who was traveling under an American passport. The ambassador has admitted that he employed Archibald to bear official dispatches from him to his government."

"By reason of the admitted purpose and intent of Mr. Dumba to conspire to cripple legitimate industries of the people of the United States and to interrupt their legitimate trade and, by reason of the flagrant violation of diplomatic propriety in employing an American citizen protected by an American passport as a secret bearer of official dispatches through the lines of the enemy of Austria-Hungary, the president directs me to inform your excellency that Mr. Dumba is no longer acceptable to the government of the United States as the ambassador of his imperial majesty at Washington."

"Believing that the imperial and royal government will realize that the government of the United States has no alternative but to request the recall of Mr. Dumba on account of his improper conduct, the government of the United States expresses its deep regret that this course has become necessary and assures the imperial and royal government that it sincerely desires to continue the cordial and friendly relations which exist between the United States and Austria-Hungary."

LANSING."

Dr. Dumba announced through The Associated Press Sept. 14 that he had requested his government to recall him on leave of absence in order that he might make a personal report on the situation in the United States, which had resulted in the request by the United States government for his recall. Sept. 18 he made public a long letter which he had sent to Secretary Lansing complaining of the restrictions placed upon him through the American wireless censorship.

"As the Austro-Hungarian ambassador is and has been for many months past," the letter read, "in the phenomenal position of being unable to communicate privately with his government, although our enemies are and have been permitted freely to use the cables for their secret code dispatches without censorship, I have, by the grace of your department, now been permitted to communicate with my government through the German embassy, but to the extent only of asking for leave of absence to the end that I may in person explain my position and meantime to suspend judgment upon the charges contained in your excellency's message, and am now awaiting a reply."

"I have not even been allowed to advise my government that I do not admit having conspired to do any act of violation of the laws of the country to which I am accredited and whose hospitality I have enjoyed and have in no way abused. The message that I sought to have transmitted to that effect was rejected by your censor, as hereafter explained. In some unacceptable way this confidential message was communicated to the press and has been published."

"I, of course, do not and cannot question the power of the government of the United States to dismiss me by handing me my passports and assuring me safe conduct home without assigning any reason therefor or on such grounds as it may deem sufficient without regard to my opinion as to its justice."

"When, however, your government sees fit to resort to the extraordinary and to me humiliating course of preferring charges against me to my government without advising me of the intended action or even intimating that such action is contemplated and to request my recall upon those charges as confessed, whilst at the same time refusing me permission even to communicate privately with my government, I respectfully protest against such action as unjust to me and contrary to diplomatic usage."

"I ask you, in all fairness, was ever an ambassador in a neutral country confronted with such a situation, created and enforced by the government to which he is accredited, whilst ambassadors representing enemies of his country have unlimited means of secret communication?"

"It has been made literally impossible for me to communicate privately with my government. Under such conditions I have no apologies to offer for having intrusted my letter to Mr. Archibald. If the conveying of letters to Europe by Americans traveling abroad during this war is an offense, it is one of which most Americans are apparently ignorant, as the courtesy has frequently been volunteered by my friends and is habitually practiced. It did not occur to me that it was improper nor am I able yet to see it in that light, having regard to the entirely legitimate purposes I had in mind in the line of the performance of my duty."

VON PAPEN AND OTHER LETTERS.

The ambassador's letter, both as to its contents and the manner of its publication without the consent of the state department, was viewed with displeasure by the Washington authorities.

In the house of commons in London, Sept. 21, the thirty-four letters and documents found on Mr. Archibald were read. Two of the letters were from Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador to the United States, another from Capt. von Papen, the German military attaché in Washington, and others were from Ambassador Dumba. The Bernstorff letters related to Archibald's pro-German activities in the United States. That from Capt. von Papen was addressed to his wife. Referring to the sinking of the Arabic he said:

"I always say to those idiotic yankees that they had better hold their tongues."

In one of his letters Dr. Dumba, referring to the Austro-Hungarian protest to the United States against the "enormous deliveries of weapons and munitions to the allies," wrote:

"The true ground for the discouraging attitude of the president lies, as his confidant, Mr. House, already informed me in January and has now repeated, in the fact that the authorities in a serious crisis would have to rely on neutral foreign countries for all their war material. At no price and in no cause will Mr. Wilson allow this source to dry up. For this reason I am of the opinion that a return to the question, whether officially, by replies of your excellency [Baron Stephen Burian], or by a semi-official conversation between myself and the secretary of state, will not only be useless but even, having regard to the self-willed temperament of the president, harmful. . . . As last autumn, he can always, through his personal influence, either force the house of representatives to take his point of view against their better judgment, or, on the other hand, in the senate can overthrow the resolution already voted in favor of prohibiting the export of guns and ammunition."

Ambassador Penfield at Vienna was instructed Sept. 25 to make clear to the Austro-Hungarian government informally that the United States must insist on the recall of Dr. Dumba and that his departure on "leave of absence" could not be satisfactory. The request of the United States was complied with, the ambassador was formally recalled and he sailed for home Oct. 5 after having received safe conducts from both the British and French governments.

Mr. Archibald was not permitted to continue his journey to Germany but was compelled to return to the United States. No official action was taken in his case nor in that of Capt. von Papen.

RECALL OF GERMAN ATTACHES.

The following announcement was made by Robert Lansing, secretary of state, on the afternoon of Dec. 3, 1915:

"On account of what this government considers their improper activities in military and naval matters, this government has requested the immediate recall of Capt. Boy-Ed and Capt. von Papen, as they are no longer acceptable to this government."

Although the request for the recall of the attaches was announced the day following the conviction of the Hamburg-American Steamship company officials on charges of neutrality violation involving Capt. Boy-Ed, Secretary Lansing said that this particular case was foreign to the considerations that determined the action of the administration. The request for the recall of the attaches was delivered to Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, Nov. 30.

Capt. Boy-Ed came first into public notice through the misuse of American passports by German reservists seeking to slip through the allied lines to join their armies. Some of the men in whose cases the captain's name was mentioned are now serving terms in federal penitentiaries. Capt. Boy-Ed's name was mentioned in the chartering of ships from American ports to supply fuel and food to German warships early in the war. During the trial of the Hamburg-American line officials witnesses testified that Boy-Ed handled $750,000, which came from Berlin for chartering such ships and furnishing supplies.

Capt. von Papen's principal offenses consisted of sending a report to the German war office by James T. Archibald and the interest he is said to have had in fomenting strikes in munition factories. It was Von Papen who, in a letter taken from Archibald when the British authorities searched him, made a reference to "these idiotic Yankees."

PEACE PACT OF THE ALLIES.

The Italian government having decided to accede to the declaration between the British, French and Russian governments signed in London on Sept. 5, 1914, which declaration was acceded to by the Japanese government on Oct. 19, 1915, the undersigned, duly authorized thereto by their respective governments, declare as follows:

The British, French, Italian, Japanese and Russian governments mutually engage not to conclude peace separately during the present war.

The five governments agree that when terms of peace come to be discussed no one of the allies will demand conditions of peace without previous agreement with each of the other allies.

GENERAL REVIEW OF THE WAR.

When this edition of the Almanac and Year-Book went to press the European war, which practically began Aug. 1, 1914, was still in progress. No decisive result had been reached and the end of the gigantic struggle was not in sight. The combatants had lost between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners and had expended more than $20,000,000,000, but their resources in men and money had not been exhausted and each still hoped for ultimate victory.

Up to the close of the first sixteen months of the war the nations directly involved in the conflict numbered twelve. Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria fought against Russia, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Serbia, Montenegro, Japan and Italy, and there was every prospect of Greece and Roumania becoming involved. Detailed estimates of the number of men involved, of the casualties and the cost of the war are given elsewhere.

On surveying the operations on land it is found that the principal war areas were in Belgium, France, Serbia, Galicia, Russian Poland, East Prussia, the Baltic provinces of Russia, the Gallipoli peninsula at the Dardanelles and that part of Austria-Hungary along the Isonzo river and in the Trentino. Fighting also occurred in various parts of Africa, China and Oceania or wherever Germany had colonies. England had a taste of actual warfare when certain coast towns were bombarded by German war vessels from the sea and by airships from the sky. The civil populations suffering most severely were those of Belgium, Poland and Serbia, and to save them from starvation the United States and other countries had to contribute heavily in food and money. Comparatively little could be done, however, to alleviate the distress in these countries resulting from the presence of mighty hosts carrying on a savage and relentless war.

Germany's first great rush after hostilities had begun in August, 1914, was in the direction of Paris. Belgium, in spite of a stout resistance on the part of King Albert and his small army, presented but a minor obstacle in the way of the kaiser's trained legions, who took fort after fort and city after city until only a narrow strip in western Flanders remained unconquered. Yet that little obstacle had both a material and a moral influence on the course of the war; it delayed the German armies just long enough to give the French time to prepare for defense and the English to come to the front, and it had an effect upon the sentiment and sympathy of the world the value of which to the allies cannot be computed.

Before the end of August the German armies under Kluck, Hausen, Buelow and Crown Prince Frederick William took Liege, Brussels, Namur and other Belgian cities, including Louvain, part of which was burned under circumstances which aroused great criticism. Later they invested Antwerp and Ostend and forced the Belgian government to take refuge in France. By Sept. 1 they forced the French and British almost to the gates of Paris. Sept. 6 the battle of the Marne was begun, the Germans were decisively defeated and Paris was saved. Under the supreme command of Gen. Joffre the French and British pursued the exhausted Germans to the Aisne river, but here they were stopped. Trenches were dug from the North sea to the Vosges mountains and in these trenches the Belgians, British and French on the one side and the Germans on the other were still facing each other up to the time this review was written.

There were great battles, such as those of Soissons, of Neuve Chapelle, of Arras, of Ypres, of St. Eloi and of the Champagne, in which tens of thousands of men fell, and there were countless engagements in which fewer men were killed, wounded or captured at one time, but the advance or retreat in nearly all instances was measured by yards and not by miles. The line of battle was not essentially different in December, 1915, from what it was in September, 1914.

NEW WAR METHODS ADOPTED.

The mode of fighting, adapted to changed conditions, altered somewhat as the months passed. The rifle was less used than formerly; more reliance was placed upon machine guns, hand grenades and artillery; infantry attacks were preceded by heavy bombardments designed to level barbed wire entanglements and ruin trenches, and they took place most frequently at night under the glare of illuminating rockets. Deadly gases were introduced by the Germans as a new weapon; they used these effectively at the battle of Ypres, and the allies used them later. But artillery played the leading role. At no other time in the world's history were high explosive shells used so lavishly. The result was that until late in 1915 the contending powers were unable to meet the demands made upon them. This was especially true of Britain and Russia. Germany, with the great plant at Essen, was able to employ guns of the largest caliber and to supply them with an abundance of ammunition. France also did well in this respect and its 75s, or 3 inch guns, gained the reputation of being the most effective cannon in the field. Great Britain took energetic steps to remedy the situation. David Lloyd George was placed in charge of the munitions industry and after some months of hard work he had the factories in the united kingdom turning out an enormous quantity of shells and other ammunition. Heavy guns were also made on an extensive scale. In addition large quantities of war material were imported from the United States. Russia took similar steps, securing its supplies from Japan as well as the United States and largely increasing its own output. Toward the close of 1915 the allies, with respect to munitions of war, were probably on more than even terms with the central powers.

In the western war area Britain had an army numbering approximately 1,000,000 men by the end of 1915. It held a comparatively short line from Ypres to La Bassee, but it was the object of many determined attacks and in proportion to its numbers it lost as heavily in officers and men as did the French. It won victories at Neuve Chapelle, St. Eloi, La Bassee and Hooge and suffered defeat at Ypres. The British forces were under the general command of Field Marshal Sir John French.

EVENTS ON EASTERN FRONT.

In the eastern war area operations were conducted on an even greater scale than in the west, and the fighting was of a most sanguinary character. The battle line here extended from the Baltic sea on the north to Bukovina and Roumania on the south. It swayed back and forth from east to west and west to east, and much of the ground was fought over several times, with the result that farms and villages were ruined and the inhabitants reduced to abject poverty. East Prussia in Germany, Galicia in Austria-Hungary, the Polish provinces in Russia and Courland were the greatest sufferers from the havoc of war.

It seemed to be the policy of Grand Duke Nicholas, commander in chief of the Russian armies, to send his armies as far forward as possible, and then, when the Germans and Austro-Hungarian way until German troops under Gen. von Hindenburg again came to the rescue. In a battle lasting several days in the second week of February the Russians were defeated in the Mazurian lake region, losing, it was reported, 30,000 men in killed and wounded and 50,000 taken prisoners.

In April and May of 1915 the Germans began an advance into the Russian Baltic region from the East Prussian border. This continued steadily, the invaders capturing Libau, an important port on the Baltic, and other places, the Russians not being able to offer effective resistance.

INVASION OF RUSSIAN POLAND.

Russian Poland was invaded by Austro-Hungarian troops in the first days of the war, but they were soon driven out by the czar's southern armies. On the last day of August, 1914, the Austrians were badly defeated near Lemberg and two days later the Russians entered that city to remain there until June 22 of 1915, when they were compelled to evacuate it. They advanced to the west and southwest, coming close to Cracow and occupying the principal passes in the Carpathians. Cossacks rode down into the plain of Hungary, but their projected raid on Budapest had to be abandoned when their comrades were forced by reverses elsewhere to retire from the dearly bought positions in the passes.

One of the most brilliant exploits of the Russian forces in Galicia was the capture of the fortress of Przemyśl. After a siege lasting seven months it surrendered March 22, 1915, with its garrison of nearly 120,000 officers and men.

BATTLE ZONE IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM DEC. 1, 1915.

armies had concentrated in any place, to retreat before them until they were hampered by the length of their lines of communication. Then the Russians would turn and drive them back.

Germany and Austria-Hungary in opposing Russia had some advantages and some disadvantages. They had large armies of well trained troops, led by skillful officers; they had an abundance of modern guns of all kinds and ammunition, and they had a network of strategic railways, making the transportation of soldiers and supplies easy, and they had at least two great generals in Von Hindenburg and Von Mackensen, each of whom was made a field marshal in recognition of distinguished services in the field. Their one great disadvantage, which the Russians also had to face, was the immensity of the field of operations and the difficulty of knowing where the foe would strike. When at some distance from their own frontiers they had to overcome serious difficulties in the way of transportation.

Soon after the declaration of war the Russians invaded East Prussia and before the end of August had reached Allenstein and invested the fortress of Königsberg. Emperor William was compelled to send large forces to the defense of the invaded province. These, led by Gen. von Hindenburg, inflicted a severe defeat on the Russians at Allenstein and Tannenberg and hurled them back beyond the frontier. There was more or less fighting in this region in September and October, with varying results. In the early part of 1915 a new Russian army advanced into East Prussia and had things its own

Its fall had a depressing effect upon the Teutonic allies and a correspondingly encouraging effect upon the Russians, who counted confidently upon the capture of Cracow and the invasion of hostile territory on the other side of the Carpathians. Fate willed it otherwise and the stronghold had to be abandoned when the combined German and Austro-Hungarian armies began their great "drive." Przemyśl was recaptured by the Austrians June 3, but the victors this time found little in the way of booty and took few prisoners.

DEIVE TOWARD WARSAW.

Warsaw, capital of Russian Poland, was the objective of several formidable movements under the leadership of Gen. von Hindenburg, who, because of his successes in East Prussia and the Mazurian lakes region, had become the idol of the German people. In October, 1914, his forces approached Warsaw after occupying Lodz and Radom, but after a ten day battle, ending Oct. 24, they were defeated and had to turn back. The Russians pursued them and recaptured Lodz and Radom. About the middle of November the Germans made another swift advance toward Warsaw, but were stopped again near Lodz and forced to retreat. The effort was renewed in December and there was much desperate fighting. Lodz once more fell into the hands of the Germans and the Russians had to make a new alignment of their forces. At the end of the month both the German and Austrian forces in Galicia and Russian Poland were on the defensive.

In January and February, 1915, the fighting line before Warsaw was along the Bzura river, south to Rawa, thence south to the Pilica river and thence east to Ivangorod. Both sides were protected by trenches and the battles, while bloody, were as indecisive as those in France and Belgium. There were numerous encounters in the course of the winter and spring along the whole line from the Baltic to Bukovina, and the names of such places as Tilsit, Kovno, Grodno, Lomza, Czenstochowa, Jaroslau, Stanislaui, Kolomea, Czernowitz, Dukla pass, Uszok pass, Stryj, Tarnow, Mlawa and Klece, with those of scores of others, became familiar to readers of the war news from the east. There were victories and defeats, advances and retreats following each other in rapid and bewildering succession.

On the whole the Russians until May, 1915, had the advantage in that they occupied nearly the whole of Galicia and Bukovina and were on the defensive only on a line not far from their own frontier in Russian Poland and the Baltic regions. Then disaster befell them, chiefly, it was claimed, because of lack of artillery, small arms and ammunition. The Germans and Austro-Hun-garlans, possessing an abundance of these, massed huge armies under Field Marshal von Hindenburg, Field Marshal von Mackensen, Prince Leopold of Bavaria, Gen. von Buelow, Gen. von Woyrsch and Field Marshal Archduke Frederick against the right and left wings of the extended Russian lines. The Germans under Hindenburg advanced to the north of Warsaw, while the Austrians under Archduke Frederick, assisted by Gen. von Mackensen, made an onslaught on the Russian positions in the neighborhood of the Carpathians in western Galicia. The "drive" was a spectacular one, especially in Galicia, where the Russians were forced to give up all their conquered territory. They had to abandon successively the Dukla and Lupkow passes, Malatow, Gorlice and Gromik, losing 100,000 men in prisoners alone. In June they were forced to give up Stryj, Radom, Przemyśl, Stanislaui, Mosciska, Grodek and Lemberg. In July the Teuton armies had driven the Russians entirely out of Galicia and back to the last line of forts defending Warsaw. Hindenburg and his hosts came from the west and north and Mackensen and Woyrsch from the south and south-east. The Russians made a stand at the fortresses of Novo Georgievsk on the north and Ivangorod on the south. The fortress of Osowetz, farther to the north, which had withstood a siege of many months, also was a rallying point for Grand Duke Nicholas' hard pressed forces.

Warsaw finally fell early in August, as did the fortress of Ivangorod, and before the end of the month the Germans had taken Kovno, Novo Georgievsk and Brest-Litovsk. In September they took Grodno, Vilna and other Russian cities and advanced close to Dvinsk and Riga. The Russian armies retreated steadily until they reached the Dvinsk-Riga region, but here they held, and the German armies, hampered by bad weather, bad roads, lack of supplies and the necessity of detaching troops for the Serbian campaign, could get no farther. Grand Duke Nicholas, who had saved the Russian armies from annihilation by a masterly retreat, was transferred to the Caucasus front and the czar himself assumed the supreme command. Gen. Russky was his chief aid in the north and Gen. Ivanoff in the south. It should be added that the southern end of the Russian line was subjected to less pressure than the northern end and recovered more quickly. Here the Austrians and Germans met a number of reverses in the latter part of the year and had all they could do to hold the enemy in check.

Russia was more successful against Turkey than against its nearest European foes. Late in December, 1914, and early in January, 1915, several Turkish army corps invaded the territory of Kars in the southwestern part of the Caucasus. One column got as far as Ardahan to the northwest of Kars, while another was operating in the vicinity of Sari Kamysh. Both these columns were routed, the one at Sari Kamysh losing an entire corps consisting of 38,400 men, who were nearly all captured. The Russians inflicted further losses on the Turks at Kara-Urganf and Jenikici. Turkish operations in the region of the Caucasus were thereafter of a less serious character, though 30,000 Ottomans and Kurds attempted to invade the Khor-Dilam region, close to the borders of the Caucasus and Persia, in the latter part of April. The Russians defeated them in a two days' battle, the Turks leaving 3,500 dead on the field.

DARDANELLES CAMPAIGN.

Turkey, as a matter of fact, could not spare many troops to fight Russia, as it had its hands full in combating strong enemies much nearer home. The warships of the allies bombarded some of the fortified Turkish positions on the coasts late in December, 1914, and in January, 1915, but no serious work was attempted until Feb. 19, when a combined fleet of British and French warships began to shell the forts at the Aegean sea entrance to the Dardanelles. These, after a bombardment lasting until Feb. 26, were finally reduced and men were landed at Kum Kale and Sidd-el-Bahr. Efforts were made to clear the straits of mines and to reduce the inner forts by bombarding them heavily from both sides of the Gallipoli peninsula, but it was soon discovered that this could not be done without the assistance of large forces of infantry. Before this conclusion was arrived at the British lost the battle ships Irresistible and Ocean and the French the battle ship Bouvet with many men. The vessels were said to have been sunk by torpedoes fired from shore.

Strong forces of British, Australian and French troops, with the co-operation of the naval forces, succeeded in making a landing April 25 at the fall. Gen. Limon von Sanders, a German, was in command of the Turks until he was wounded. Gen. H. J. E. Gouraud, commander of the French expeditionary force, was also wounded. He was succeeded by Gen. M. Sarraill.

IN MESOPOTAMIA.

Numerous encounters between British-Indian troops advancing up the Tigris and Euphrates valleys in Mesopotamia and Turkish troops sent from Bagdad and Constantinople took place in the spring of 1915 and later in the year. In April a Turkish force of from 15,000 to 20,000 was badly defeated near Shaiba. The battle was considered of importance in that it placed the British in possession of that part of Mesopotamia through which the projected German railway from Bagdad to the Persian gulf was to run. In July the British won another victory at Sukesh-Shaykh on the Euphrates river. The British later in October got within ten miles of Bagdad, but were then defeated and compelled to retreat.

ENTRANCE OF ITALY INTO WAR.

Italy, after remaining neutral nearly ten months, declared war on Austria-Hungary May 24, 1915. The circumstances are given in detail elsewhere and need not be repeated here.

Having decided upon its course of action, Italy formally joined the triple entente on equal terms, making it a quadruple entente. Its military forces of something like 1,000,000 men, which had been kept in readiness for months, were set in motion under the leadership of Lieut.-Gen. Cadorna, chief of staff, and of King Victor Emmanuel himself. The first step was to throw a strong force of infantry and cavalry across the Austro-Hungarian frontier and occupy a stretch of territory along the River Isonzo. They took Caporetto, Cormons, Cervignano and Terzo and subsequently captured Monfalcone and besieged Goritz and Malborgeth. The Austrian positions, strong by nature, had been heavily fortified and progress was necessarily slow and costly. The Alpine regiments in the Italian army performed surprising feats in taking some of these positions by climbing the high peaks dominating them. The Italians spared the towns as much as possible, as the majority of the inhabitants were of their own race, and directed their attention chiefly to attacking the Austrian troops in such a manner as to do little damage to property. The fighting along the Isonzo continued until December with heavy losses on both sides, but with the Italians taking the initiative and going forward steadily. This was also true of their advance along Lake Garda in the direction of Trent.

SERBIA IS OVERWHELMED.

Serbia played an important part in the period of the war under review. Early in 1914 it resisted invasions successfully for many weeks and then its forces were compelled to retreat before overwhelming Austrian forces. In December, 1914, the tide turned and the Serbians drove out the invaders and recaptured Belgrade, which had been surrendered after a long and severe bombardment. Several high Austrian commanders were deposed from their positions for their failure to conquer Serbia. The little Balkan nation met another dangerous foe in the shape of typhus fever and had to rest on its military laurels during the first six months of 1915.

In September, 1915, the Germans and Austrians having practically completed their campaign against the Russians and Bulgaria having been induced to join the central powers in the war, 400,000 troops under Field Marshal von Mackensen were gathered on the Serbian frontier. In this move the Germanic empires had several purposes in view. Among them were these: To open a way to Constantinople to assist the Turks, who were calling for help against the allies; to threaten the Suez canal, Egypt and India; to revenge the defeats suffered in Serbia in 1914 and to prevent Bulgaria and the other Balkan states from going over to the allies.

ITALIAN-AUSTRIAN BATTLE ZONE DEC. 1, 1915.

several points at the tip of the Gallipoli peninsula, suffering heavy casualties in so doing. In August a landing was made at Suvla bay and some severe fighting took place. Here and elsewhere the allies maintained themselves, though fiercely attacked by large Turkish forces with German officers and bombarded by heavy artillery. They inflicted a number of severe defeats on the foe and have progressed slowly in the direction of Krithia and the fortress of Achil Baba. They have themselves lost heavily in killed, wounded and missing. In May the British battle ships Goliath, Triumph and Majestic were torpedoed and sunk. The British land operations on the peninsula were under command of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton until he was succeeded by Gen. Sir C. C. Munro late in Bulgaria was chiefly concerned with getting back the Macedonian territory wrested from it at the end of the second Balkan war and it was convinced that it could best accomplish this by uniting its fortunes with the Germans and Austrians, who had been so successful against the Russians. So, after a long period of apparent unwillingness to take part in the hostilities, it finally renounced its oft-proclaimed neutrality and in October declared war against Serbia. The allies, of course, promptly declared war on Bulgaria, but though they landed troops at Saloniki, Greece, advanced toward Strumnitza and occupied certain points in southeastern Serbia they were unable to be much help to King Peter and his people. Attacked from the north by the Germans, the northwest by the Austro-Hungarians and the east by the Bulgarians, the Serbians, though fighting bravely, were speedily driven from Belgrade. Nish and other centers and before the end of November had been forced into Montenegro and Albania. Early in December they were hop-party numbered 12,000 men, who were supported by six batteries. The main attack was at Tous-soum, but there was also an assault at El Kantara, which was easily repulsed. The British loss was small, while the total casualties of the Turks on the expedition were about 3,000. No further attacks were made on the canal, though it was reported that mines had been placed in it which did some damage to shipping.

ARMENIANS MASSACRED.

Turkish forces occupied Tabriz, capital of the province of Azerbaijan, Persia, in January 1915, for the purpose of making it a base for attacking the Russian positions in the province of Erivan, north of the Persian border and south of Tiflis. Taking advantage of the warlike situation, bands of Kurds, and, in some instances, Turks, began making raids on the Christian population of the Urumiah district, killing hundreds. It was later estimated that between 5,000 and 10,000 persons had met their death either by violence or by starvation in their efforts to escape. Safety came only when the Russians reoccupied Tabriz at the end of the month. Thousands were saved by taking refuge in the American mission stations under the protection of the American flag. Later reports told of wholesale massacres of Armenians in the neighborhood of Van, in Turkish Armenia. How many were killed is not precisely known.

UPRISING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

In October, 1914, an uprising by German sympathizers, led by Col. Solomon G. Maritz, Gen. Christian R. De Wet, Gen. Christian F. Beyers and others, occurred in the Union of South Africa. Gen. Louis Botha, premier, and Gen. J. C. Smuts, minister of defense, remained loyal, and after a campaign lasting into January routed the rebels and captured most of their leaders. Gen. Botha then turned his attention to German Southwest Africa, and here, too, after a strenuous campaign, ending July 9, 1915, he succeeded in capturing all the German military forces and taking possession for Great Britain of a territory having an area of 322,450 square miles. Other British forces were operating against the Kamerun and German East Africa, the only colonies remaining to Germany. Before the conquest of German Southwest Africa Germany had lost to Australia and Japan all its possessions in the Pacific ocean.

Japan, as the ally of Great Britain and promptly doubtless by a desire to square accounts with Germany for depriving it of the Liaotung peninsula after the war with China in 1895, issued an ultimatum to the kaiser's government Aug. 15, 1914, declaring that unless Germany withdrew its warships from the orient and evacuated Kiaochow by Aug. 23 war would be declared. Germany paid no attention to the demand and at the expiration of the period named Japan proceeded to invest Kiaochow by sea and land. Though strongly fortified, the city of Tsingtao, the headquarters of German interests in Kiaochow and China, was compelled to surrender Nov. 7, 1914, to the Japanese and British troops. The Japanese forces at this writing still occupy Kiaochow and Tsingtao.

ON THE SEA.

On the sea the operations of the belligerents were confined chiefly to isolated engagements between comparatively small squadrons, to commerce raiding, to the destruction of enemy ships by means of mines and submarines and to maintaining more or less effective blockade in specified war zones. Details of the battles at Heligoland light, the Falkland islands and other naval occurrences are given elsewhere.

In commerce raiding the Germans were highly successful, destroying scores of British merchant vessels in various parts of the world. Their ships winning the greatest renown in this respect were the Emden, the Dresden, the Prinz Elfel Friedrich, the Karlsruhe, the Kronprinz Wilhelm and the Koenigsberg. The Emden, after destroying British merchantmen valued at between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 and sinking a Russian cruiser and a French destroyer, was put out of commission ing against hope for assistance from Russia and Italy as well as from the British and French forces in the south. At that time the position to be taken by Greece and Rumania was still a matter of doubt. Serbia, as a nation, was in the same position as Belgium; it had practically ceased to exist and its conquerors were discussing the best mode of dividing its territory among themselves.

ATTACK ON SUEZ CANAL.

In January, 1915, the Turks assembled considerable forces on the Sinai peninsula for the purpose of taking or destroying the Suez canal. They were led by Djemel Pasha and they carried with them a number of pontoons with which to cross the canal. They succeeded in crossing the desert and early on the morning of Feb. 3 attacked along the greater part of the eastern canal front between Serapeum and Toussoum. The British had been advised of their approach and met them with such a deadly fire that they were compelled to flee at all points, leaving 400 killed and 600 prisoners. It was estimated that the attacking by the Australian cruiser Sydney at Cocos island Nov. 9, 1914. The Dresden, after escaping from the battle at the Falkland islands, was sunk by British warships at Juan Fernandez island in the Pacific March 14, 1915. The Karlsruhe was bottled up in the Ruffi river, East Africa, Oct. 30, 1914, and was finally destroyed July 11, 1915. The Prinz Eitel Friedrich and the Kronprinz Wilhelm took refuge at Newport News, Va. March 10 and April 11, respectively, and were interned for the remainder of the war.

Floating mines planted by the belligerents in the North sea and other waters caused many disasters, especially to merchant vessels, those flying neutral flags included. They were less effective against ships of war, as these took greater precautions.

ACTIVITY OF SUBMARINES.

Submarines played a conspicuous part in the war at sea and also in diplomatic controversies arising from the manner in which they were used in violation of international law. German under-sea craft torpedoed and sank the British battle ships Formidable, Triumph and Majestic; the cruisers Pathfinder, Aboukir, Cressy, Hogue and Hermes; the auxiliary cruisers Oceanic and Bayano, and various other naval ships. The under-sea craft winning the most renown in this work were the U-29, commanded by Capt. Otto Weddigen, and the U-51, commanded by Capt. Otto Hersing. The latter submarine traveled 5,000 miles from Germany to the Dardanelles, where it sank two British battle ships. The former, after destroying three British cruisers and a considerable number of merchant vessels, was itself sunk in March, 1915, by a British vessel. The French, Italians and Russians also suffered from the activities of German and Austro-Hungarian submarines. The French lost the cruiser Leon Gambetta, the Italians the cruisers Amalfi and Giuseppe Garibaldi, and the Russians the battle ship Panteleimon and the cruiser Pallada. On the other hand, British submarines destroyed the German cruiser Hein, the Turkish cruiser Medidieh and battle ship Messoudieh. An English under-sea boat caused the destruction of Turkish craft not only in the Sea of Marmora, but in the harbor of Constantinople itself.

It was, however, in the destruction of merchant vessels that the submarines showed the greatest activity. There being no German freight or passenger vessels on the seas anywhere after the first week or two of the war, the victims of the under-sea terrors were necessarily craft belonging to other nations. Britain naturally suffered the most, its merchant fleet being the largest in the world and its ports being near Germany; but the other belligerent countries had to pay their share of the toll. The German submarine warfare was not confined to attacks upon the vessels of the countries with which the empire was at war. They extended in numerous cases to vessels belonging to neutral countries, when such craft ventured into the "war zone," covering the waters about the coasts of the British isles, France, Germany, Russia and Italy. Scores of ships belonging to Norway, Sweden, Holland, Denmark and the United States were sent to the bottom in the North sea, the British channel, the Irish sea and the Baltic, in some cases without warning and without giving the crews a chance to escape with their lives.

Germany held that it was justified in adopting this mode of warfare, because Great Britain had blockaded German ports and was attempting to starve the people of the empire by preventing the admission of food supplies, either directly or through the Scandinavian countries and Holland. Feb. 4 the German government issued a proclamation declaring the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English channel, to be a war zone on and after Feb. 18, 1915.

What resulted from this policy is told at length in other chapters on the war. (See American Diplomatic Correspondence, Sinking of the Lusitania, etc.) It is sufficient to say here that the sinking of the great liner Lusitania, May 7, 1915, with the loss of more than 1,000 lives, of whom 102 were Americans, led to a controversy which seriously threatened the friendly relations of the United States and Germany. Through the energetic protests of President Wilson the submarine policy of the German admiralty was modified to some extent, but up to December, 1915, no complete settlement of the controversy had been reached.

RESIGNATION OF MR. BRYAN.

Owing to a difference of opinion as to the proper manner of conducting the diplomatic correspondence with the belligerent nations, and especially with Germany concerning the Lusitania case, the American secretary of state, William Jennings Bryan, resigned his position June 8. He maintained that both he and President Wilson desired to keep the United States from becoming embroiled in the European war, but that they disagreed as to methods. Mr. Bryan was succeeded by Robert Lansing, counselor of the state department.

Numerous peace suggestions were made in 1915, but they did not, so far as could be learned, come from the belligerents, but from outsiders. The announced purpose of all the powers at war was to fight it out until definite results had been achieved, and this was emphasized by written agreements not to enter into separate peace negotiations.

COST OF THE EUROPEAN WAR.

Figures on the cost of the war compiled by financial authorities in Europe and America varied to a considerable extent, but there was a practical agreement that up to the end of 1915 the direct expenses to the belligerent nations alone would be at least $20,000,000,000. Some made the amount larger and some smaller. One estimate made in Paris, France, was that up to Oct. 20 the European war had cost the belligerents $24,801,000,000, divided as follows:

England	$6,163,000,000	Italy	$643,000,000
France	4,128,000,000	Germany	7,380,000,000
Russia	5,770,000,000	Austria	2,763,000,000

J. ANDER BRYCE, M. P., brother of Viscount James Bryce, former ambassador to the United States, predicted March 30, 1915, that if the war lasted eighteen months its cost would be $40,000,000,000. "The present expenditures of the belligerents," he explained, "will reach $25,000,000,000 in eighteen months. The expenditures by neutrals add at least half a billion; the destruction of property, $5,000,000,000, and the loss of the labor of 12,000,000 fighting men the remainder of the total."

At the time Mr. Bryce made this estimate neither Italy nor Bulgaria had entered the war.

In its financial review of the first year of the war the National City bank of New York said: "Excluding Italy, the war loans have aggregated approximately $15,500,000,000, and this about represents the governmental expenditures for the year."

In a memorandum accompanying a bill introduced in the French chamber of deputies Sept. 16 Minister of Finance Ribot said that the average monthly war expenses of Russia were $360,000,000, Germany's $500,000,000 and Great Britain's $600,000,000. The daily expenses of the four leading nations in the war at about that time were estimated at $62,000,000, divided as follows: Great Britain, $20,000,000; France, $14,000,000; Germany, $16,000,000; Russia, $12,000,000.

"In addition to these loans," said the Annalist, "Canada has borrowed $70,000,000, India $15,000,000, and numerous neutrals have put out loans, estimated at an amount exceeding $300,000,000, the principal ones being the borrowings of Holland, amounting to $142,000,000, and Roumania $40,000,000."

Other heavy loans were made between Oct. 25 and Dec. 1. Austria-Hungary issued a third war loan, the subscriptions to which up to Nov. 8 amounted to approximately $960,000,000. Nov. 11 the British government was voted a new credit of $2,000,000,000, which, it was said, would pay the war expenses up to the middle of February, 1916. It was announced Nov. 17 that the British loans made or promised to other countries from the beginning of the war amounted to $2,374,125,000. It was also said that at that time the daily war expenses of Britain had risen to $21,750,000. In the house of commons Nov. 23 Chancellor McKenna said that the nation's wealth approximated $130,000,000,000, and that the yearly income of the government was $20,600,000,000.

In November the people of France subscribed more than $5,000,000,000 to carry on the war. The figure named had been reached in Paris alone up to Nov. 26. It was announced that the cost of the war to France for the first eighteen months, or from Aug. 1, 1914, to Dec. 31, 1915, amounted to $4,287,712,200.

Oct. 24 an imperial ukase was issued by the Russian minister of finance to transact on foreign markets credit operations amounting to $2,750,000,000 and also to issue abroad the necessary treasury bonds in pounds, francs and dollars. In November the people of Russia subscribed for a domestic loan of $500,000,000.

Canada's domestic war loan was increased Dec. 3 from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Turkey and Bulgaria were financed by Germany, while Great Britain and France lent money to Italy, Roumania, Greece and Serbia. Switzerland and Holland were obliged to borrow large sums for military expenditures occasioned by the war.

ANGLO-FRENCH LOAN IN AMERICA.

In order to establish credits in the United States for the purchase of munitions of war and to stabilize exchange, which had become irregular and uncertain, an Anglo-French mission under the chairmanship of Lord Reading was sent to the United States to negotiate for a loan. It was said at first that the sum wanted was $1,000,000,000, but only half that amount was arranged for. On the arrival of the delegates in New York Sept. 10 the following statement was issued on behalf of the commissioners:

"The joint Anglo-French mission under the chairmanship of Lord Reading, which has been sent to the United States in connection with the question of the exchanges between New York, London and Paris, arrived this morning on the Red Star steamer Lapland.

"The British delegates are the Rt.-Hon. Lord Reading of Bureigh, G. C. B., K. C. V. O. (the lord chief justice of England); Sir Edward Holden, Bart.; Sir Henry Babington Smith, K. C. B., C. S. I., and Basil P. Blackett, C. B., of the British treasury. The French delegates are M. Octave Homberg, representing the French treasury, and M. Ernest Mallet, director of the Banque de France.

"The object of the visit of the mission is to consult American bankers and others as to the best means to be adopted for regulating the exchange between New York, London and Paris, that the commerce and industry of the three countries may suffer as little as possible during the course of the war. Mr. Blackett will act as secretary to the mission."

Conferences were held with J. Pierpont Morgan and many bankers representing strong financial institutions in the United States, and Sept. 23, when the delegates were on a visit to Chicago, Lord Reading made an official statement as to the terms of the loan. It was as follows:

"The discussions between the Anglo-French financial mission and the American bankers have resulted in the formation of a definite plan for a loan to the British and French governments, to be issued in this country on a broad and popular basis. The proceeds of the loan will be employed exclusively in America for the purpose of making the rate of exchange more stable, thereby helping to maintain the volume of American exports.

"The plan contemplates the issue of $500,000,000 five-year 5½ per cent bonds, constituting a direct joint and several obligation of the British and French governments, as regards both capital and interest. No other external loan has been issued by either of these governments apart from notes of the French treasury to a limited amount, maturing in the next six months. The bonds will be repayable at the end of five years or convertible, at the option of the holder, into 4½ per cent bonds of the two governments, repayable not earlier than fifteen years and not later than twenty-five years from the present time by the two governments jointly and severally.

"The bonds will be issued to the public at 98, yielding approximately 5½ per cent to the investor. The work of offering this loan will be carried out by a syndicate which Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and a large group of American bankers and financial houses will at once set about to form. Such group will include representatives throughout the country, and all members of the syndicate will be on precisely the same footing. This syndicate, whose business it will be to arrange that every investor shall have an opportunity to subscribe to the issue, will contract to purchase the loan from the two governments at 96."

The coupon bonds were issued in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000 and the registered bonds in denominations of $1,000, $10,000 and $50,000 and authorized multiples. All were dated Oct. 15, 1915, and were due Oct. 15, 1920. They were readily disposed of to banks and the public.

AMERICAN DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Dec. 26, 1914.

The present condition of American foreign trade resulting from the frequent seizures and detentions of American cargoes destined to neutral European ports has become so serious as to require a candid statement of the views of this government in order that the British government may be fully informed as to the attitude of the United States toward the policy which has been pursued by the British authorities during the present war.

You will, therefore, communicate the following to his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, but in doing so you will assure him that it is done in the most friendly spirit and in the belief that frankness will better serve the continuance of cordial relations between the two countries than silence, which may be misconstrued into acquiescence in a course of conduct which this government cannot but consider to be an infringement upon the rights of American citizens.

The government of the United States has viewed with growing concern the large number of vessels laden with American goods destined to neutral ports in Europe which have been seized on the high seas, taken into British ports and detained sometimes for weeks by the British authorities. During the early days of the war this government assumed that the policy adopted by the British government was due to the unexpected outbreak of hostilities and the necessity of immediate action to prevent contraband from reaching the enemy. For this reason it was not disposed to judge this policy harshly or protest it vigorously, although it was manifestly very injurious to American trade with the neutral countries of Europe. This government, relying confidently upon the high regard which Great Britain has so often exhibited in the past for the rights of other nations, confidently awaited amendment of a course of action which denied to neutral commerce the freedom to which it was entitled by the law of nations.

This expectation seemed to be rendered the more assured by the statement of the foreign office early in November that the British government were satisfied with guarantees offered by the Norwegian, Swedish and Danish governments as to nonexportation of contraband goods when consigned to named persons in the territories of those governments and that orders had been given to the British fleet and customs authorities to restrict interference with neutral vessels carrying such cargoes so consigned to verification of ships' papers and cargoes.

It is therefore a matter of deep regret that, though nearly five months have passed since the war began, the British government have not materially changed their policy and do not treat less rigorously ships and cargoes passing between neutral ports in the peaceful pursuit of lawful commerce, which belligerents should protect rather than interrupt. The greater freedom from detention and seizure, which was confidently expected to result from consigning shipments to definite consignees, rather than "to order," is still awaited.

It is needless to point out to his majesty's government, usually the champion of the freedom of the seas and the rights of trade, that peace, not war, is the normal relation between nations and that the commerce between countries which are not belligerents should not be interfered with by those at war unless such interference is manifestly an imperative necessity to protect their national safety, and then only to the extent that it is a necessity. It is with no lack of appreciation of the momentous nature of the present struggle in which Great Britain is engaged and with no selfish desire to gain undue commercial advantage that this government is reluctantly forced to the conclusion that the present policy of his majesty's government toward neutral ships and cargoes exceeds the manifest necessity of a belligerent and constitutes restrictions upon the rights of American citizens on the high seas which are not justified by the rules of international law or required under the principle of self-preservation.

The government of the United States does not intend at this time to discuss the propriety of including certain articles in the lists of absolute and conditional contraband which have been proclaimed by his majesty. Open to objection as some of these seem to this government, the chief ground of present complaint is the treatment of cargoes of both classes of articles when bound to neutral ports.

Articles listed as absolute contraband, shipped from the United States and consigned to neutral countries, have been seized and detained on the ground that the countries to which they were destined have not prohibited the exportation of such articles. Unwarranted as such detentions are, in the opinion of this government, American exporters are further perplexed by the apparent indecision of the British authorities in applying their own rules to neutral cargoes. For example, a shipment of copper from this country to a specified consignee in Sweden was detained because, as was stated by Great Britain, Sweden has placed no embargo on copper. On the other hand, Italy not only prohibited the export of copper, but, as this government is informed, put in force a decree that shipments to Italian consignees or "to order" which arrive in ports of Italy, cannot be exported or transhipped. The only exception Italy makes is of copper which passes through that country in transit to another country. In spite of these decrees, however, the British foreign office has thus far declined to affirm that copper shipments consigned to Italy will not be molested on the high seas. Seizures are so numerous and delays so prolonged that exporters are afraid to send their copper to Italy, steamship lines decline to accept it, and insurers refuse to issue policies upon it. In a word, a legitimate trade is being greatly impaired through uncertainty as to the treatment which it may expect at the hands of the British authorities.

We feel that we are abundantly justified in asking for information as to the manner in which the British government propose to carry out the policy which they have adopted, in order that we may determine the steps necessary to protect our citizens engaged in foreign trade in their rights and from the serious losses to which they are liable through ignorance of the hazards to which their cargoes are exposed.

In the case of conditional contraband the policy of Great Britain appears to this government to be equally unjustified by the established rules of international conduct. As evidence of this, attention is directed to the fact that a number of the American cargoes which have been seized consist of foodstuffs and other articles of common use in all countries, which are admittedly relative contraband. In spite of the presumption of innocent use because destined to neutral territory, the British authorities made these seizures and detentions without, so far as we are informed, being in possession of facts which warranted a reasonable belief that the shipments had in reality a belligerent destination, as that term is used in international law. Mere suspicion is not evidence, and doubts should be resolved in favor of neutral commerce, not against it. The effect upon trade in these articles between neutral nations resulting from interrupted voyages and detained cargoes is not entirely cured by reimbursement of the owners for the damages which they have suffered, after investigation has failed to establish an enemy destination. The injury is to American commerce with neutral countries as a whole through the hazard of the enterprise and the repeated diversion of goods from established markets.

It also appears that cargoes of this character have been seized by the British authorities because of a belief that, though not originally so intended by the shippers, they will ultimately reach the territory of the enemies of Great Britain. Yet this belief is frequently reduced to a mere fear, in view of the embargoes which have been decreed by the neutral countries to which they are destined on the articles composing the cargoes.

That a consignment "to order" of articles listed as conditional contraband and shipped to a neutral port raises a legal presumption of enemy destination appears to be directly contrary to the doctrines previously held by Great Britain, and thus stated by Lord Salisbury during the South African war:

"Foodstuffs, though having a hostile destination, can be considered as contraband of war only if they are for the enemy's forces; it is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used; it must be shown that this was, in fact, their destination at the time of their seizure."

With this statement as to conditional contraband the views of this government are in entire accord, and upon this historic doctrine, consistently maintained by Great Britain when a belligerent as well as a neutral, American shippers were entitled to rely.

The government of the United States readily admits the full right of a belligerent to visit and search on the high seas the vessels of American citizens or other neutral vessels carrying American goods and to detain them when there is sufficient evidence to justify a belief that contraband articles are in their cargoes; but his majesty's government, judging by their own experience in the past, must realize that this government cannot, without protest, permit American ships or American cargoes to be taken into British ports and there detained for the purpose of searching generally for evidence of contraband or upon presumptions created by special municipal enactments which are clearly at variance with international law and practice.

This government believes, and earnestly hopes his majesty's government will come to the same belief, that a course of conduct more in conformity with the rules of international usage, which Great Britain has strongly sanctioned for many years, will in the end better serve the interests of belligerents as well as those of neutrals.

Not only is the situation a critical one to the commercial interests of the United States, but many of the great industries of this country are suffering because their products are denied long established markets in European countries which, though neutral, are contiguous to the nations at war. Producers and exporters, steamship and insurance companies are pressing, and not without reason, for relief from the menace to transatlantic trade which is gradually but surely destroying their business and threatening them with financial disaster.

The government of the United States, still relying upon the deep sense of justice of the British nation, which has been so often manifested in the intercourse between the two countries during so many years of uninterrupted friendship, expresses confidently the hope that his majesty's government will realize the obstacles and difficulties which their present policy has placed in the way of commerce between the United States and the neutral countries of Europe, and will instruct its officials to refrain from all unnecessary interference with the freedom of trade between nations which are sufferers, though not participants, in the present conflict, and will in their treatment of neutral ships and cargoes conform more closely to those rules governing the maritime relations between belligerents and neutrals which have received the sanction of the civilized world, and which Great Britain has, in other wars, so strongly and successfully advocated.

In conclusion, it should be impressed upon his majesty's government that the present condition of American trade with the neutral European countries is such that, if it does not improve, it may arouse a feeling contrary to that which has so long existed between the American and British peoples. Already it is becoming more and more the subject of public criticism and complaint.

There is an increasing belief, doubtless not entirely unjustified, that the present British policy toward American trade is responsible for the depression in certain industries which depend upon European markets. The attention of the British government is called to this possible result of their present policy to show how widespread the effect is upon the industrial life of the United States, and to emphasize the importance of removing the cause of complaint. BRYAN.

THE BRITISH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

Foreign Office, Jan. 7, 1915.

Your Excellency: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of the 28th of December.

It is being carefully examined and the points raised in it are receiving consideration, as the result of which a reply shall be addressed to your excellency dealing in detail with the issues raised and the points to which the United States government have drawn attention. This consideration and the preparation of the reply will necessarily require some time, and I therefore desire to send without further delay some preliminary observations which will, I trust, help to clear the ground and remove some misconceptions that seem to exist.

Let me say at once that we entirely recognize the most friendly spirit referred to by your excellency and that we desire to reply in the same spirit and in the belief that, as your excellency states, frankness will best serve the continuance of cordial relations between the two countries.

His majesty's government cordially concurs in the principle enunciated by the government of the United States that a belligerent in dealing with trade between neutrals should not interfere unless such interference is necessary to protect the belligerent's national safety, and then only to the extent to which this is necessary. We shall endeavor to keep our action within the limits of this principle on the understanding that it admits our right to interfere when such interference is not with "bona fide" trade between the United States and another neutral country, but with trade in contraband destined for the enemy's country, and we are ready, whenever our action may unintentionally exceed this principle, to make redress.

We think that much misconception exists as to the extent to which we have, in practice, interfered with trade. Your excellency's note seems to hold his majesty's government responsible for the present condition of trade with neutral countries, and it is stated that through the action of his majesty's government the products of the great industries of the United States have been denied long established markets in European countries which, though neutral, are contiguous to the seat of war. Such a result is far from being the intention of his majesty's government, and they would exceedingly regret that it should be due to their action. I have been unable to obtain complete or conclusive figures showing what the state of trade with these neutral countries has been recently, and I can therefore only ask that some further consideration should be given to the question whether United States trade with these neutral countries has been so seriously affected. The only figures as to the total volume of trade that I have seen are those for the exports from New York for the month of November, 1914, and they are as follows, compared with the month of November, 1913.

Exports from New York for November, 1913, and November, 1914, respectively.

Sweden	377,000	2,258,000
Norway	477,000	2,318,000
Italy	2,971,000	4,781,000
Holland	4,389,000	3,960,000

It is true that there may have been a falling off in cotton exports, as to which New York figures would be no guide, but his majesty's government have been most careful not to inter-fore with cotton, and its place on the free list has been scrupulously maintained.

We do not wish to lay too much stress upon incomplete statistics; the figures above are not put forward as conclusive; and we are prepared to examine any further evidence with regard to the state of trade with these neutral countries which may point to a different conclusion or show that it is the action of his majesty's government in particular and not the existence of a state of war and consequent diminution of purchasing power and shrinkage of trade which is responsible for adverse effects upon trade with the neutral countries.

That the existence of a state of war on such a scale has had a very adverse effect upon certain great industries, such as cotton, is obvious; but it is submitted that this is due to the general cause of diminished purchasing power of such countries as France, Germany and the united kingdom rather than interference with trade with neutral countries. In the matter of cotton, it may be recalled that the British government gave special assistance through the Liverpool cotton exchange to the renewal of transactions in the cotton trade of not only the united kingdom, but of many neutral countries.

Your excellency's note refers in particular to the detention of copper. The figures taken from official returns for the export of copper from the United States for Italy for the months during which the war has been in progress up to the end of the first three weeks of December are as follows:

1913: 15,202,000 pounds. 1914: 36,285,000 pounds. Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Switzerland are not shown separately for the whole period in the United States returns but are included in the heading "Other Europe" (that is, Europe other than the united kingdom, Russia, France, Belgium, Austria, Germany, Holland and Italy). The corresponding figures under this heading are as follows:

1913: 7,271,000 pounds. 1914: 35,347,000 pounds. With such figures the presumption is very strong that the bulk of copper consigned to these countries has recently been intended not for their own use but for that of a belligerent who cannot import it direct. It is therefore an imperative necessity for the safety of this country while it is at war that his majesty's government should do all in its power to stop such part of this import of copper as is not genuinely destined for neutral countries.

Your excellency does not quote any particular shipment of copper to Sweden which has been detained. There are, however, four consignments to Sweden at the present time of copper and aluminum which, though definitely consigned to Sweden, are, according to positive evidence in the possession of his majesty's government, definitely destined for Germany.

I cannot believe that, with such figures before them and in such cases as those just mentioned, the government of the United States would question the propriety of the action of his majesty's government in taking suspected cargoes to a prize court, and we are convinced that it cannot be in accord with the wish either of the government or of the people of the United States to strain the international code in favor of private interests so as to prevent Great Britain from taking such legitimate means for this purpose as are in her power.

With regard to the seizure of foodstuffs to which your excellency refers, his majesty's government are prepared to admit that foodstuffs should not be detained and put into a prize court without presumption that they are intended for the armed forces of the enemy or the enemy government. We believe that this rule has been adhered to in practice hitherto, but if the United States government have instances to the contrary we are prepared to examine them, and it is our present intention to adhere to the rule, though we cannot give an unlimited and unconditional undertaking in view of the departure by those against whom we are fighting from hitherto accepted rules of civilization and humanity and the uncertainty as to the extent to which such rules may be violated by them in future.

From the 4th of August last to the 3d of January, the number of steamships proceeding from the United States for Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Italy has been 773. Of these there are forty-five which have had consignments or cargoes placed in the prize court, while of the ships themselves only eight have been placed in the prize court and one of these has since been released. It is, however, essential under modern conditions that where there is real ground for suspecting the presence of contraband the vessels should be brought into port for examination; in no other way can the right of search be exercised, and but for this practice it would have to be completely abandoned. Information was received by us that special instructions had been given to ship rubber from the United States under another designation to escape notice and such cases have occurred in several instances. Only by search in a port can such cases, when suspected, be discovered and proved. The necessity for examination in a port may also be illustrated by a hypothetical instance connected with cotton, which has not yet occurred. Cotton is not specifically mentioned in your excellency's note, but I have seen public statements made in the United States that the attitude of his majesty's government with regard to cotton has been ambiguous, and thereby responsible for depression in the cotton trade. There has never been any foundation for this allegation. His majesty's government have never put cotton on the list of contraband; they have throughout the war kept it on the free list, and on every occasion when questioned on the point they have stated their intention of adhering to this practice. But information has reached us that precisely because we have declared our intention of not interfering with cotton ships carrying cotton will be specially selected to carry concealed contraband, and we have been warned that copper will be concealed in bales of cotton. Whatever suspicions we have entertained, we have not so far made these a ground for detaining any ship carrying cotton; but should we have information giving us real reason to believe in the case of a particular ship that the bales of cotton concealed copper or other contraband, the only way to prove our case would be to examine and weigh the bales, a process that could be carried out only by bringing the vessel into a port. In such a case, or if examination justified the action of his majesty's government, the case shall be brought before a prize court and dealt with in the ordinary way.

That the decisions of British prize courts hitherto have not been unfavorable to neutrals is evidenced by the decision in the Miramichi case. This case, which was decided against the crown, laid down that the American shipper was to be paid even when he had sold a cargo c. i. f. and when the risk of loss after the cargo had been shipped did not apply to him at all.

It has further been represented to his majesty's government, though this subject is not dealt with in your excellency's note, that our embargoes on the export of some articles, more especially rubber, have interfered with commercial interests in the United States. It is, of course, difficult for his majesty's government to permit the export of rubber from British dominions to the United States at a time when rubber is essential to belligerent countries for carrying on the war and when a new trade in exporting rubber from the United States in suspiciously large quantities to neutral countries has actually sprung up since the war. It would be impossible to permit the export of rubber from Great Britain unless the right of his majesty's government were admitted to submit to a prize court cargoes of rubber exported from the United States which they believe to be destined for an enemy country and reasonable latitude of action for this purpose were conceded. But his majesty's government have now provisionally come to an arrangement with the rubber exporters in Great Britain which will permit of licenses being given under proper guaranties for the export of rubber to the United States.

We are confronted with the growing danger that neutral countries contiguous to the enemy will become, on a scale hitherto unprecedented, a base of supplies for the armed forces of our enemies and for materials for manufacturing armament. The trade figures of imports show how strong this tendency is, but we have no complaint to make of the attitude of the governments of those countries, which so far as we are aware have not departed from proper rules of neutrality. We endeavor in the interests of our own national safety to prevent this danger by intercepting goods really destined for the enemy without interfering with those which are "bona fide" neutral.

Since the outbreak of the war the government of the United States have changed their previous practice and have prohibited the publication of manifests till thirty days after the departure of vessels from the United States ports. We had no "locus standi" for complaining of this change and did not complain. But the effect of it must be to increase the difficulty of ascertaining the presence of contraband and to render necessary in the interests of our national safety the examination and detention of more ships than would have been the case if the former practice had continued.

Pending a more detailed reply, I would conclude by saying that his majesty's government do not desire to contest the general principles of law on which they understand the note of the United States to be based and desire to restrict their action solely to interferences with contraband destined for the enemy. His majesty's government are prepared, whenever a cargo coming from the United States is detained, to explain the case on which such detention has taken place and would gladly enter into any arrangement by which mistakes can be avoided and reparation secured promptly when any injury to the neutral owners of a ship or cargo has been improperly caused, for they are most desirous in the interest both of the United States and of other neutral countries that British action should not interfere with the normal importation and use by the neutral countries of goods from the United States.

I have, etc., E. GREY.

THE BRITISH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

Foreign Office, Feb. 10, 1915.

Your Excellency: Your excellency has already received the preliminary answer, which I handed to you on the 7th January, in reply to your note of the 28th December on the subject of the seizures and detentions of American cargoes destined for neutral European ports.

Since that date I have had further opportunity of examining into the trade statistics of the United States as embodied in the customs returns in order to see whether the belligerent action of Great Britain has been in any way the cause of the trade depression which your excellency describes as existing in the United States and also whether the seizures of vessels or cargoes which have been made by the British navy have inflicted any loss on American owners for which our existing machinery provides no means of redress. In setting out the results of my investigation I think it well to take the opportunity of giving a general review of the methods employed by his majesty's government to intercept contraband trade with the enemy, of their consistency with the admitted right of a belligerent to intercept such trade and also of the extent to which they have endeavored to meet the representations and complaints from time to time addressed to them on behalf of the United States government.

Toward the close of your note of the 28th December your excellency described the situation produced by the action of Great Britain as a pitiful one to the commercial interests of the United States, and said that many of the great industries of the country were suffering because their products were denied long established markets in neutral European countries contiguous to the nations at war.

It is unfortunately true that in these days, when trade and finance are cosmopolitan, any war—particularly a war of any magnitude—must result in a grievous dislocation of commerce, including that of the nations which take no part in the war. Your excellency will realize that in this tremendous struggle, for the outbreak of which Great Britain is in no way responsible, it is impossible for the trade of any country to escape all injury and loss, but for such his majesty's government are not to blame.

I do not understand the paragraph which I have quoted from your excellency's note as referring to these indirect consequences of the state of war, but to the more proximate and direct effect of our belligerent action in dealing with neutral ships and cargoes on the high seas. Such action has been limited to vessels on their way to enemy ports or ports in neutral countries adjacent to the theater of war, because it is only through such ports that the enemy introduces the supplies which he requires for carrying on the war.

In my earlier note I set out the number of ships which had sailed from the United States for Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Italy, and I there stated that only eight of the 773 had been placed in the prize court and that only forty-five had been temporarily detained to enable particular consignments of cargo to be discharged for the purpose of prize court proceedings. To measure the effect of such naval action it is necessary to take into consideration the general statistics of the export trade of the United States during the months preceding the outbreak of war and those since the outbreak.

Taking the figures in millions of dollars, the exports of merchandise from the United States for the seven months of January to July, 1914, inclusive, were 1,201, as compared with 1,327 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $126,000,000.

For the months of August, September, October and November—that is to say, for the four months of the war preceding the delivery of your excellency's note—the figures of the exports of merchandise were (again in millions of dollars) 667, as compared with 923 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $256,000,000.

If, however, the single article of cotton be eliminated from the comparison, the figures show a very different result. Thus the exports of all articles of merchandise other than cotton from the United States during the first seven months of 1914 were $966,000,000, as against $1,127,000,000 in 1913, a drop of $161,000,000, or 14½ per cent. On the other hand, the exports of the same articles during the months August to November amounted to $608,000,000, as compared with $630,000,000 in 1913, a drop of only $22,000,000, or less than 4 per cent.

It is therefore clear that, if cotton be excluded, the effect of the war has been not to increase but practically to arrest the decline of American exports which was in progress earlier in the year. In fact, any decrease in American exports which is attributable to the war is essentially due to cotton. Cotton is an article which cannot possibly have been affected by the exercise of our belligerent rights, for, as your excellency is aware, it has not been declared by his majesty's government to be contraband of war, and the rules under which we are at present conducting our belligerent operations give us no power in the absence of a blockade to seize or interfere with it when on its way to a belligerent country in neutral ships. Consequently no cotton has been touched.

Into the causes of the decrease in the exports of cotton I do not feel that there is any need for me to enter, because whatever may have been the cause it is not to be found in the exercise of the belligerent rights of visit, search and capture, or in our general right when at war to intercept the contraband trade of our enemy. Imports of cotton to the United Kingdom fell as heavily as those to other countries. No place felt the outbreak of war more acutely than the cotton districts of Lancashire, where for a time an immense number of spindles were idle. Though this condition has now to a large extent passed away, the consumption of the raw material in Great Britain was temporarily much diminished. The same is no doubt true of France.

The general result is to show convincingly that the naval operations of Great Britain are not the cause of any diminution in the volume of American exports, and that if the commerce of the United States is in the unfavorable condition which your excellency describes the cause ought in fairness to be sought elsewhere than in the activities of his majesty's naval forces.

I may add that the circular issued by the department of commerce at Washington on the 23d January admits a marked improvement in the foreign trade of the United States, which we have noted with great satisfaction. The first paragraph of the circular is worth quoting verbatim:

"A marked improvement in our foreign trade is indicated by the latest reports issued by the department of commerce through its bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, sales of food-stuffs and certain lines of manufactures having been unusually large in November, the latest period for which detailed information is at hand. In that month exports aggregated $206,000,000, or double the total for August last, when, by reason of the outbreak of war, our foreign trade fell to the lowest level reached in many years. In December there was further improvement, the month's exports being valued at $246,000,000, compared with $233,000,000 in December, 1913, and within $4,000,000 of the high record established in December, 1912."

A better view of the situation is obtained by looking at the figures month by month. The exports of merchandise for the last five months have been (in millions of dollars):

August	110
September	156
October	191
November	191
December	205
December	246

The outbreak of war produced in the United States, as it did in all neutral countries, an acute but temporary disturbance of trade. Since that time there seems to have been a steady recovery, for to-day the exports from the United States stand at a higher figure than on the same date last year.

Before passing away from the statistics of trade and in order to demonstrate still more clearly, if necessary, that the naval operations of Great Britain and her allies have had no detrimental effects on the volume of trade between the United States and neutral countries, it is worth while to analyze the figures of the exports to Europe since the outbreak of hostilities. For this purpose the European countries ought to be grouped under three heads: Great Britain and those fighting with her, neutral countries and enemy countries. It is, however, impossible for me to group the countries in this way satisfactorily, as the figures relating to the export trade of the United States with each country have not yet been published. In the preliminary statement of the export trade of the United States with foreign countries only principal countries are shown and various countries which are tabulated separately in the more detailed monthly summary of commerce and finance are omitted. Those omitted include not only the Scandinavian countries, the exports to which are of peculiar importance in dealing with this question, but also Austria.

So far as it is possible to distribute the figures under the headings which I have indicated above (all the figures being given in thousands of dollars) the results are as follows:

Total exports to Europe from the 1st August to the 30th November, 413,995, as against 597,342 in 1913. Of these Great Britain and her allies took 288,312, as against 316,805 in 1913. Germany and Belgium took 1,881, as against 177,136 in 1913; whereas neutral countries (among which Austria-Hungary is unavoidably included) took 123,802, as against 103,401 in 1913.

The general complaint in your excellency's note was that the action of Great Britain was affecting adversely the trade of the United States with neutral countries. The naval operations of Great Britain certainly do not interfere with commerce from the United States on its way to the united kingdom and the allied countries, and yet the exports to Great Britain and her allies during those four months diminished to the extent of over $28,000,000, whereas those to neutral countries and Austria increased by over $20,000,000.

The inference may fairly be drawn from these figures, all of which are taken from the official returns published by the United States government, that not only has the trade of the United States with the neutral countries in Europe been maintained, as compared with previous years, but also that a substantial part of this trade was, in fact, trade intended for the enemy countries going through neutral ports by routes to which it was previously unaccustomed.

One of the many inconveniences to which this great war is exposing the commerce of all neutral countries is undoubtedly the serious shortage in shipping available for ocean transport and the consequential result of excessive freights.

It cannot fairly be said that this shortage is caused by Great Britain's interference with neutral ships. At the present time there are only seven neutral vessels awaiting adjudication in the prize courts in this country and three in those in the British dominions. As your excellency is aware, I have already instructed our ambassador at Washington to remind the parties who are interested in these vessels that it is open to them to apply to the court for the release of these ships on bail, and if an application of this sort is made by them it is not likely to be opposed by the crown. There is, therefore, no reason why such an application should not be favorably entertained by the court, and, if accepted, all these vessels will again be available for the carriage of commerce. Only one neutral vessel is now detained in this country in addition to those awaiting adjudication in the prize court.

Every effort has been made in cases in which it has been found necessary to institute proceedings against portions of the cargo to secure the speedy discharge of the cargo and the release of the ship so as to enable it to resume work. Great Britain is suffering from the shortage of shipping and the rise in freights as acutely as, if not more than, other nations and his majesty's government have taken every step that they could consistently with their belligerent interests to increase the tonnage available for the transport of sea-borne commerce. The enemy ships which have been condemned in the prize courts in this country are being sold as rapidly as possible in order that they may become available for use, and those which have been condemned in the prize courts overseas are being brought to this country in order that they may be disposed of here and again placed in active employment.

The difficulties have been accentuated by the unforeseen consequences of the convention which was signed at The Hague in 1907 relative to the status of enemy merchant vessels at the outbreak of war. This convention was a well-intentioned effort to diminish the losses which war must impose upon innocent persons and provided that enemy merchant ships seized by a belligerent in whose ports they lay at the outbreak of war should not be condemned, but should merely be detained for the period of the war unless they were liberated in the days of grace. We could come to no arrangement with the German government for the reciprocal grant of days of grace and the German merchant vessels lying in British ports when the war broke out have therefore been sentenced to detention in lieu of condemnation. The normal result would have been still further to reduce the volume of shipping available for the commerce of the world. To ease the situation, however, his majesty's government are resorting to the power of requisitioning which is given by the convention so that these ships may again be placed in active service.

Your excellency will see, therefore, that his majesty's government are doing all in their power to increase the volume of shipping available. I hope it will be realized that the detention of neutral ships by his majesty's government with a view to the capture of contraband trade on its way to the enemy has not contributed nearly so much to the shortage of shipping as has the destruction of neutral vessels by submarine mines indiscriminately laid by the enemy on the high seas, many miles from the coast, in the track of merchant vessels. Up till now twenty-five neutral vessels have been reported as destroyed by mines on the high seas; quite apart from all questions of the breach of treaties and the destruction of life, there is far more reason for protest on the score of belligerent interference with innocent neutral trade through the mines scattered by the enemy than through the British exercise of the right of seizing contraband.

I trust that what I have said above will be sufficient to convince your excellency's government that the complaints that the naval policy of Great Britain has interfered with the shipments of American products to long established markets in neutral European countries is founded on a misconception.

In justice to the peoples of both countries, I feel that this opportunity should be taken to explain the lines on which his majesty's government have been acting hitherto, so as to show that the line they have followed is in no way inconsistent with the general fundamental principle of international law and to indicate the care with which they have endeavored to meet the representations which have been made by the United States government from time to time during the war on these questions.

No one in these days will dispute the general proposition that a belligerent is entitled to capture contraband goods on their way to the enemy; that right has now become consecrated by long usage and general acquiescence. Though the right is ancient, the means of exercising it alter and develop with the changes in the methods and machinery of commerce. A century ago the difficulties of land transport rendered it impracticable for the belligerent to obtain supplies of sea-borne goods through a neighboring neutral country. Consequently the belligerent actions of his opponents neither required nor justified any interference with shipments on their way to a neutral port. This principle was recognized and acted on in the decisions in which Lord Stowell laid down the lines on which captures of such goods should be dealt with.

The advent of steam power has rendered it as easy for a belligerent to supply himself through the ports of a neutral contiguous country as through his own and has therefore rendered it impossible for his opponent to refrain from interfering with commerce intended for the enemy merely because it is on its way to a neutral port.

No better instance of the necessity of countering new devices for dispatching contraband goods to an enemy by new methods of applying the fundamental principle of the right to capture such contraband can be given than the steps which the government of the United States found it necessary to take during the American civil war. It was at that time that the doctrine of continuous voyage was first applied to the capture of contraband—that is to say, it was then for the first time that a belligerent found himself obliged to capture contraband goods on their way to the enemy, even though at the time of capture they were en route for a neutral port from which they were intended subsequently to continue their journey. The policy then followed by the United States government was not inconsistent with the general principles already sanctioned by international law, and met with no protest from his majesty's government, though it was upon British cargoes and upon British ships that the losses and the inconvenience due to this new development of the application of the old rule of international law principally fell. The criticisms which have been directed against the steps then taken by the United States came, and come, from those who saw in the methods employed in Napoleonic times for the prevention of contraband a limitation upon the right itself, and failed to see that in Napoleonic times goods on their way to a neutral port were immune from capture, not because the immediate destination conferred a privilege, but because capture under such circumstances was unnecessary.

The facilities which the introduction of steamers and railways has given to a belligerent to introduce contraband goods through neutral ports have imposed upon his opponent the additional difficulty, when endeavoring to intercept such trade, of distinguishing between the goods which are really destined for the commerce of that neutral country and the goods which are on their way to the enemy. It is one of the many difficulties with which the United States government found themselves confronted in the days of the civil war, and I cannot do better than quote the words, which Mr. Seward, who was then secretary of state, used in the course of the diplomatic discussion arising out of the capture of some goods on their way to Matamoros which were believed to be for the insurgents:

"Neutrals engaged in honest trade with Matamoros must expect to experience inconvenience from the existing blockade of Brownsville and the adjacent coast of Texas. While this government unfeignedly regrets this inconvenience, it cannot relinquish any of its belligerent rights to favor contraband trade with insurgent territory. By insisting upon those rights, however, it is sure that that necessity for their exercise at all, which must be deplored by every friendly commercial power, will the more speedily be terminated."

The opportunities now enjoyed by a belligerent for obtaining supplies through neutral ports are far greater than they were fifty years ago, and the geographical conditions of the present struggle lend additional assistance to the enemy in carrying out such importation. We are faced with the problem of intercepting such supplies when arranged with all the advantages that flow from elaborate organization and unstinted expenditure. If our belligerent rights are to be maintained, it is of the first importance for us to distinguish between what is really bona fide trade intended for the neutral country concerned and the trade intended for the enemy country. Every effort is made by organizers of this trade to conceal the true destination, and if the innocent neutral trade is to be distinguished from the enemy trade it is essential that his majesty's government should be entitled to make, and should make, careful inquiry with regard to the destination of particular shipments of goods even at the risk of some slight delay to the parties interested. If such inquiries were not made, either the exercise of our belligerent rights would have to be abandoned, tending to the prolongation of this war and the increase of the loss and suffering which it is entailing upon the whole world, or else it would be necessary to indulge in indiscriminate captures of neutral goods and their detention throughout all the period of the resulting prize court proceedings. Under the system now adopted it has been found possible to release without delay, and consequently without appreciable loss to the parties interested, all the goods of which the destination is shown as the result of the inquiries to be innocent.

It may well be that the system of making such inquiries is to a certain extent a new introduction, in that it has been practiced to a far greater extent than in previous wars, but if it is correctly described as a new departure, it is a departure which is wholly to the advantage of neutrals and which has been made for the purpose of relieving them so far as possible from loss and inconvenience.

There was a passage in a note which the state department addressed to the British ambassador at Washington on the 7th of November to which I think it may be well to refer:

"In the opinion of this government, the belligerent erent right of visit and search requires that the search should be made on the high seas at the time of the visit, and that the conclusion of the search should rest upon the evidence found on the ship under investigation and not upon circumstances ascertained from external sources."

The principle here enunciated appears to me to be inconsistent with the practice in these matters of the United States government as well as of the British government. It certainly was not the rule upon which the United States government acted either during the civil war or during the Spanish-American war, nor has it ever been the practice of the British government, nor, so far as I am aware, of any other government which has had to carry on a great naval war; as a principle I think it is impossible in modern times. The necessity for giving the belligerent captor full liberty to establish by all the evidence at his disposal the enemy destination with which the goods were shipped was recognized in all the leading decisions in the prize courts of the United States during the civil war.

No clearer instance could be given than the reporter's statement of the case of the Bermuda (3 Wallace, 614):

"The final destination of the cargo in this particular voyage was left so skillfully open . . . that it was not quite easy to prove, with that certainty which American courts require, the intention, which it seemed plain must have really existed. Thus to prove it required that truth should be collated from a variety of sources, darkened and disguised; from others opened as the cause advanced, and by accident only; from coincidences undesigned and facts that were circumstantial. Collocations and comparisons, in short, brought largely their collective force in aid of evidence that was more direct."

It is not impossible that the course of the present struggle will show the necessity for belligerent action to be taken in various ways which may at first sight be regarded as a departure from old practice. In my note of the 7th of January I dealt at some length with the question of the necessity of taking vessels into port for the purposes of carrying out an effective search, where search was necessary; to that subject I feel that I need not again recur.

The growth in the size of steamships necessitates in many cases that the vessel should go into calm water, in order that even the right of visit, as apart from the right of search, should be exercised. In modern times a steamer is capable of pursuing her voyage irrespective of the conditions of the weather. Many of the neutral merchantmen which our naval officers are called upon to visit at sea are encountered by our cruisers in places and under conditions which render the launching of a boat impossible. The conditions during winter in the North Atlantic frequently render it impracticable for days together for a naval officer to board a vessel on her way to Scandinavian countries. If a belligerent is to be denied the right of taking a neutral merchantman, met with under such conditions, into calm water in order that the visiting officer may go aboard, the right of visit and of search would become a nullity.

The present conflict is not the first in which this necessity has arisen. As long ago as the civil war the United States found it necessary to take vessels to United States ports in order to determine whether the circumstances justified their detention.

The same need arose during the Russo-Japanese war and also during the second Balkan war, when it sometimes happened that British vessels were made to deviate from their course and follow the cruisers to some spot where the right of visit and of search could be more conveniently carried out. In both cases this exercise of belligerent rights, although questioned at first by his majesty's government, was ultimately acquiesced in.

No power in these days can afford during a great war to forego the exercise of the right of visit and search. Vessels which are apparently harmless merchantmen can be used for carrying and laying mines and even fitted to discharge torpedoes. Supplies for submarines can without difficulty be concealed under other cargo. The only protection against these risks is to visit and search thoroughly every vessel appearing in the zone of operations, and if the circumstances are such as to render it impossible to carry it out at the spot where the vessel was met with the only practicable course is to take the ship to some more convenient locality for the purpose. To do so is not to be looked upon as a new belligerent right, but as an adaptation of the existing right to the modern conditions of commerce. Like all belligerent rights, it must be exercised with due regard for neutral interests, and it would be unreasonable to expect a neutral vessel to make long deviations from her course for this purpose. It is for this reason that we have done all we can to encourage neutral merchantmen on their way to ports contiguous to the enemy country to visit some British port lying on their line of route in order that the necessary examination of the ship's papers, and, if required, of the cargo, can be made under conditions of convenience to the ship herself. The alternative would be to keep a vessel which the naval officers desired to board waiting, it might be for days together, until the weather conditions enabled the visit to be carried out at sea.

No war has yet been waged in which neutral individuals have not occasionally suffered from unjustified belligerent action; no neutral nation has experienced this fact more frequently in the past than Great Britain. The only method by which it is possible to harmonize belligerent action with the rights of neutrals is for the belligerent nation to provide some adequate machinery by which in any such case the facts can be investigated and appropriate redress can be obtained by the neutral individual. In this country such machinery is provided by the powers which are given to the prize court to deal not only with captures but also with claims for compensation. Order V., rule 2, of the British prize court rules provides that where a ship has been captured as prize, but has been subsequently released by the captors, or has by loss, destruction or otherwise ceased to be detained by them, without proceedings for condemnation having been taken, any person interested in the ship (which by order I., rule 2, includes goods) wishing to make a claim for costs and damages in respect thereof shall issue a writ as provided by order II. A writ so issued will initiate a proceeding which will follow its ordinary course in the prize court.

This rule gives the prize court ample jurisdiction to deal with any claim for compensation by a neutral arising from the interference with a ship or goods, by our naval forces. The best evidence that can be given of the discrimination and the moderation with which our naval officers have carried out their duties is to be found in the fact that up to this time no proceedings for the recovery of compensation have been initiated under the rule which I have quoted.

It is the common experience of every war that neutrals whose attempts to engage in suspicious trading are frustrated by a belligerent are wont to have recourse to their government to urge that diplomatic remonstrances should be made on their behalf, and that redress should be obtained for them in this way. When an effective mode of redress is open to them in the courts of a civilized country by which they can obtain adequate satisfaction for any invasion of their rights which is contrary to the law of nations, the only course which is consistent with sound principle is that they should be referred to that mode of redress, and that no diplomatic action should be taken until their legal remedies have been exhausted and they are in a position to show prima facie denial of justice.

The course adopted by his majesty's government during the American civil war was in strict accordance with this principle. In spite of remonstrances from many quarters, they placed full reliance on the American prize courts to grant redress to the parties interested in cases of alleged wrongful capture by American ships of war, and put forward no claims until the opportunities for redress in those courts had been exhausted. The same course was adopted in the Spanish-American war, when all British subjects who complained of captures or detentions of their ships were referred to the prize courts for relief.

Before leaving the subject may I remind your excellency of the fact that at your request you are now supplied immediately by this department with particulars of every ship under American colors which is detained, and of every shipment of cargo in which an American citizen appears to be the party interested? Not only is the fact of detention notified to your excellency, but so far as is practicable the ground upon which the vessel or cargo has been detained is also communicated to you; a concession which enables any United States citizen to take steps at once to protect his interests.

His majesty's government have also done all that lies in their power to insure rapid action when ships are reported in British ports. They realize that the ship and cargo owners may reasonably expect an immediate decision to be taken as to whether the ship may be allowed to proceed and whether her cargo or any part of it must be discharged and put into the prize court. Realizing that the ordinary methods of interdepartmental correspondence might cause delays which could be obviated by another method of procedure, they established several months ago a special committee, on which all the departments concerned are represented. This committee sits daily and is provided with a special clerical staff. As soon as a ship reaches port full particulars are telegraphed to London and the case is dealt with at the next meeting of the committee. Immediate steps being taken to carry out the action decided upon. By the adoption of this procedure it has been found possible to reduce to a minimum the delays to which neutral shipping is exposed by the exercise of belligerent rights and by the necessity, imposed by modern conditions, of examining with care the destination of contraband articles.

Particular attention is directed in your excellency's note to the policy we are pursuing with regard to conditional contraband, especially foodstuffs, and it is there stated that a number of American cargoes have been seized without, so far as your excellency's government are informed, our being in possession of facts which warranted a reasonable belief that the shipments had in reality a belligerent destination, and in spite of the presumption of innocent use due to their being destined to neutral territory. The note does not specify any particular seizures as those which formed the basis of this complaint, and I am therefore not aware whether the passage refers to cargoes which were detained before or since the order in council of the 29th October was issued.

Your excellency will no doubt remember that soon after the outbreak of war an order of his majesty in council was issued under which no distinction was drawn in the application of the doctrine of continuous voyage between absolute contraband and conditional contraband, and which also imposed upon the neutral owner of contraband somewhat drastic conditions as to the burden of proof of the guilt or innocence of the shipment.

The principle that the burden of proof should always be imposed upon the captor has usually been admitted as a theory. In practice, however, it has almost always been otherwise, and any student of the prize courts' decisions of the past or even of modern wars will find that goods seldom escape condemnation unless their owner was in a position to prove that their destination was innocent. An attempt was made some few years ago, in the unratified declaration of London, to formulate some definite rules upon this subject, but time alone can show whether the rules there laid down will stand the test of modern warfare.

The rules which his majesty's government published in the order in council of the 20th August, 1914, were criticized by the United States government as contrary to the generally recognized principles of international law, and as inflicting unnecessary hardship upon neutral commerce, and your excellency will remember the prolonged discussion which took place between us through the month of October with a view to finding some new formulae which should enable us to restrict supplies to the enemy forces and to prevent the supply to the enemy of materials essential for the making of munitions of war, while inflicting the minimum of injury and interference with neutral commerce. It was with this object that the order in council of the 29th of October was issued, under the provisions of which a far greater measure of immunity is conferred upon neutral commerce. In that order the principle of noninterference with conditional contraband on its way to a neutral port is in large measure admitted; only in three cases is the right to seize maintained, and in all those cases the opportunity is given to the claimant of the goods to establish their innocence.

Two of those cases are where the ship's papers afford no information as to the person for whom the goods are intended. It is only reasonable that a belligerent should be entitled to regard as suspicious cases where the shippers of the goods do not choose to disclose the name of the individual who is to receive them. The third case is that of goods addressed to a person in the enemy territory. In the peculiar circumstances of the present struggle, where the forces of the enemy comprise so large a proportion of the population, and where there is so little evidence of shipments on private as distinguished from government account, it is most reasonable that the burden of proof should rest upon the claimant.

The most difficult questions in connection with conditional contraband arise with reference to the shipment of foodstuffs. No country has maintained more stoutly than Great Britain in modern times the principle that a belligerent should abstain from interference with the foodstuffs intended for the civil population. The circumstances of the present struggle are causing his majesty's government some anxiety as to whether the existing rules with regard to conditional contraband, framed as they were with the object of protecting so far as possible the supplies which were intended for the civil population, are effective for the purpose or suitable to the conditions present. The principle, which I have indicated above, is one which his majesty's government have constantly had to uphold against the opposition of continental powers. In the absence of some certainty that the rule would be respected by both parties to this conflict we feel great doubt whether it should be regarded as an established principle of international law.

Your excellency will, no doubt, remember that in 1835, at the time when his majesty's government were discussing with the French government this question of the right to declare foodstuffs not intended for the military forces to be contraband, and when public attention had been drawn to the matter, the Kiel chamber of commerce applied to the German government for a statement of the latter's views on the subject. Prince Bismarck's answer was as follows:

"In answer to their representation of the 1st instant, I reply to the chamber of commerce that any disadvantage our commercial and carrying interests may suffer by the treatment of rice as contraband of war does not justify our opposing a measure which it has been thought fit to take in carrying on a foreign war. Every war is a calamity which entails evil consequences not only on the combatants but also on neutrals. These evils may easily be increased by the interference of a neutral power with the way in which a third carries on the war to the disadvantage of the subjects of the interfering power, and by this means German commerce might be weighted with far heavier losses than a transitory prohibition of the rice trade in Chinese waters. The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enemy and is a justifiable step in war if impartially enforced against all neutral ships."

His majesty's government are disposed to think that the same view is still maintained by the German government.

Another circumstance which is now coming to light is that an elaborate machinery has been organized by the enemy for the supply of foodstuffs for the use of the German army from overseas. Under these circumstances it would be absurd to give any definite pledge that in cases where the supplies can be proved to be for the use of the enemy forces they should be given complete immunity by the simple expedient of dispatching them to an agent in a neutral port.

The reason for drawing a distinction between foodstuffs intended for the civil population and those for the armed forces or enemy government disappears when the distinction between the civil population and the armed forces itself disappears.

In any country in which there exists such a tremendous organization for war as now obtains in Germany there is no clear division between those whom the government is responsible for feeding and those whom it is not. Experience shows that the power to requisition will be used to the fullest extent in order to make sure that the wants of the military are supplied, and however much goods may be imported for civil use it is by the military that they will be consumed if military exigencies require it, especially now that the German government have taken control of all the foodstuffs in the country.

I do not wish to overburden this note with statistics, but in proof of my statement as to the unprecedented extent to which supplies are reaching neutral ports I should like to instance the figures of the exports of certain meat products to Denmark during the months of September and October. Denmark is a country which in normal times imports a certain quantity of such products, but exports still more. In 1913, during the above two months, the United States exports of lard to Denmark were nil, as compared with 22,652,598 pounds in the same two months of 1914. The corresponding figures with regard to bacon were: 1913, nil; 1914, 1,022,195 pounds; canned beef, 1913, nil; 1914, 151,200 pounds; pickled and cured beef, 1913, 42,901 pounds; 1914, 156,143 pounds; pickled pork, 1913, nil; 1914, 812,872 pounds.

In the same two months the United States exported to Denmark 280,176 gallons of mineral lubricating oil in 1914, as compared with 179,252 in 1913; to Norway, 335,468 gallons in 1914, as against 151,179 gallons in 1913; to Sweden, 896,193 gallons in 1914, as against 385,476 gallons in 1913.

I have already mentioned the framing of the order in council of the 20th October, and the transmission to your excellency of particulars of ships and cargoes seized as instances of the efforts which we have made throughout the course of this war to meet all reasonable complaints made on behalf of American citizens, and in my note of the 7th January I alluded to the decision of our prize court in the case of the Miramichi, as evidencing the liberal principles adopted toward neutral commerce.

I should also like to refer to the steps which we took at the beginning of the war to insure the speedy release of cargo claimed by neutrals on board enemy ships which were captured or detained at the outbreak of war. Under our prize court rules release of such goods can be obtained without the necessity of entering a claim in the prize court if the documents of title are produced to the officer representing his majesty's government and the title to the goods is established to his satisfaction. It was shortly found, however, that this procedure did not provide for the case where the available evidence was so scanty that the officer representing the crown was not justified in consenting to a release. In order, therefore, to ameliorate the situation we established a special committee with full powers to authorize the release of goods without insisting on full evidence of title being produced. This committee dealt with the utmost expedition with a large number of claims. In the great majority of cases the goods claimed were released at once. In addition to the cases dealt with by this committee a very large amount of cargo was released at once by the procurator general on production of documents. Claimants, therefore, obtained their goods without the necessity of applying to the prize court and of incurring the expense involved in retaining lawyers and without the risk, which was in some cases a considerable one, of the goods being eventually held to be enemy property and condemned. We have reason to know that our action in this matter was highly appreciated by many American citizens.

Another instance of the efforts which his majesty's government have made to deal as leniently as possible with neutral interests may be found in the policy which we have followed with regard to the transfer to a neutral flag of enemy ships belonging to companies which were incorporated in the enemy country, but all of whose shareholders were neutral. The rules applied by the British and by the American prize courts have always treated the flag as conclusive in favor of the captors in spite of neutral proprietary interests (see the case of the Pedro, 175 U. S., 354). In several cases, however, we have consented to waive our belligerent rights to treat as enemy vessels ships belonging to companies incorporated in Germany which were subsidiary to and owned by American corporations. The only condition which we have imposed is that these vessels should take no further part in trade with the enemy country.

I have given these indications of the policy which we have followed because I cannot help feeling that if the facts were more fully known as to the efforts which we have made to avoid inflicting any avoidable injury on neutral interests, many of the complaints which have been received by the administration in Washington and which led to the protest which your excellency made to me on the 29th December, would never have been made. My hope is that when the facts which I have set out above are realized, and when it is seen that our naval operations have not diminished American trade with neutral countries, and that the lines on which we have acted are consistent with the fundamental principles of international law, it will be apparent to the government and people of the United States that his majesty's government have hitherto endeavored to exercise their belligerent rights with every possible consideration for the interests of neutrals.

It will still be our endeavor to avoid injury and loss to neutrals, but the announcement by the German government of their intention to sink merchant vessels and their cargoes without verification of their nationality or character, and without making any provision for the safety of noncombatant crews or giving them a chance of saving their lives, has made it necessary for his majesty's government to consider what measures they should adopt to protect their interests. It is impossible for one belligerent to depart from rules and precedents and for the other to remain bound by them.

I have the honor, etc., etc.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, Berlin, Feb. 6, 1915.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith two copies of the proclamation of the German admiralty of Feb. 4, 1915, declaring the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland to be comprised within the seat of war, as well as two copies each in German and French of the memorial of the imperial government on this subject and an English translation of the same.

I have, etc.,

JAMES W. GERARD.

(Inclosure 1—Translation.)

PROCLAMATION.

1. The waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English channel, are hereby declared to be war zone. On and after the 18th of February, 1915, every enemy merchant ship found in the said war zone will be destroyed without its being always possible to avert the dangers threatening the crews and passengers on that account.

2. Even neutral ships are exposed to danger in the war zone, as in view of the misuse of neutral flags ordered on January 31 by the British government and of the accidents of naval war, it cannot always be avoided to strike even neutral ships in attacks that are directed at enemy ships.

3. Northward navigation around the Shetland islands in the eastern waters of the North sea and in a strip of not less than thirty miles width along the Netherlands coast is in no danger.

VON POHL,

Chief of the Admiral Staff of the Navy.
Berlin, Feb. 4, 1915.

(Inclosure 2—Translation.)

Memorial of the imperial German government respecting retaliatory measures rendered necessary by the means employed by England contrary to international law in intercepting neutral maritime trade with Germany.

Since the commencement of the present war Great Britain's conduct of commercial warfare against Germany has been a mockery of all the principles of the law of nations. While the British government have by several orders declared that their naval forces should be guided by the stipulations of the declaration of London, they have in reality repudiated this declaration in the most essential points, notwithstanding the fact that their own delegates at the maritime conference of London acknowledged its acts as forming part of existing international law. The British government have placed a number of articles on the contraband list which are not at all, or only very indirectly, capable of use in warfare, and consequently cannot be treated as contraband either under the declaration of London or under the generally acknowledged rules of international law. In addition, they have, in fact, obliterated the distinction between absolute and conditional contraband by confiscating all articles of conditional contraband destined for Germany, whatever may be the port where these articles are to be unloaded, and without regard to whether they are destined for uses of war or peace. They have not even hesitated to violate the declaration of Paris, since their naval forces have captured on neutral ships German property which was not contraband of war. Furthermore, they have gone further than their own orders respecting the declaration of London and caused numerous German subjects capable of bearing arms to be taken from neutral ships and made prisoners of war. Finally, they have declared the North sea in its whole extent to be the seat of war, thereby rendering difficult and extremely dangerous, if not impossible, all navigation on the high seas between Scotland and Norway, so that they have in a way established a blockade of neutral coasts and ports, which is contrary to the elementary principles of generally accepted international law. Clearly all these measures are part of a plan to strike not only the German military operations but also the economic system of Germany, and in the end to deliver the whole German people to reduction by famine by intercepting legitimate neutral commerce by methods contrary to international law.

The neutral powers have in the main acquiesced in the measures of the British government; in particular, they have not been successful in securing the release by the British government of the German subjects and German merchandise illegally taken from their vessels. To a certain extent they have even contributed toward the execution of the measures adopted by England in defiance of the principle of the freedom of the seas by prohibiting the export and transit of goods destined for peaceable purposes in Germany, thus evidently yielding to pressure by England. The German government have in vain called the attention of the neutral powers to the fact that Germany must seriously question whether it can any longer adhere to the stipulations of the declaration of London, hitherto strictly observed by it, in case England continues to adhere to its practice, and the neutral powers persist in looking with indulgence upon all these violations of neutrality to the detriment of Germany. Great Britain invokes the vital interests of the British empire which are at stake in justification of its violations of the law of nations, and the neutral powers appear to be satisfied with theoretical protests, thus actually admitting the vital interests of a belligerent as a sufficient excuse for methods of waging war of whatever description.

The time has come for Germany also to invoke such vital interests. It therefore finds itself under the necessity, to its regret, of taking military measures against England in retaliation of the practice followed by England. Just as England declared the whole North sea between Scotland and Norway to be comprised within the seat of war, so does Germany now declare the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English channel, to be comprised within the seat of war, and will prevent by all the military means at its disposal all navigation by the enemy in those waters. To this end it will endeavor to destroy, after Feb. 18 next, any merchant vessels of the enemy which present themselves at the seat of war above indicated, although it may not always be possible to avert the dangers which may menace persons and merchandise. Neutral powers are accordingly forewarned not to continue to instruct their crews, passengers or merchandise to such vessels. Their attention is furthermore called to the fact that it is of urgent importance to their own vessels to steer clear of these waters. It is true that the German navy has received instructions to abstain from all violence against neutral vessels recognizable as such; but in view of the hazards of war and of the misuse of the neutral flag ordered by the British government, it will not always be possible to prevent a neutral vessel from becoming the victim of an attack intended to be directed against a vessel of the enemy. It is expressly declared that navigation in the waters north of the Shetland islands is outside the danger zone, as well as navigation in the eastern part of the North sea and in a zone thirty marine miles wide along the Dutch coast.

The German government announces this measure at a time permitting enemy and neutral ships to make the necessary arrangements to reach the ports situated at the seat of war. They hope that the neutral powers will accord consideration to the vital interests of Germany equally with those of England, and will on their part assist in keeping their subjects and their goods far from the seat of war; the more so since they likewise have a great interest in seeing the termination at an early day of the war now ravaging.

Berlin, Feb. 4, 1915.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR
GERARD.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Feb. 10, 1915.

Please address a note immediately to the imperial German government to the following effect:

The government of the United States, having had its attention directed to the proclamation of the German admiralty issued on the 4th of February, that the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole of the English channel, are to be considered as comprised within the seat of war; that all enemy merchant vessels found in those waters after the 18th instant will be destroyed, although it may not always be possible to save crews and passengers, and that neutral vessels expose themselves to danger within this zone of war because, in view of the misuse of neutral flags said to have been ordered by the British government on the 31st of January and of the contingencies of maritime warfare, it may not be possible always to exempt neutral vessels from attacks intended to strike enemy ships, feels it to be its duty to call the attention of the imperial German government, with sincere respect and the most friendly sentiments but very candidly and earnestly, to the very serious possibilities of the course of action apparently contemplated under that proclamation.

The government of the United States views those possibilities with such grave concern that it feels it to be its privilege, and indeed its duty in the circumstances, to request the imperial German government to consider before action is taken the critical situation in respect of the relations between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces, in carrying out the policy foreshadowed in the admiralty's proclamation, to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of American citizens.

It is of course not necessary to remind the German government that the sole right of a belligerent in dealing with neutral vessels on the high seas is limited to visit and search, unless a blockade is proclaimed and effectively maintained, which this government does not understand to be proposed in this case. To declare or exercise a right to attack and destroy any vessel entering a prescribed area of the high seas without first certainly determining its belligerent nationality and the contraband character of its cargo would be an act so unprecedented in naval warfare that this government is reluctant to believe that the imperial government of Germany in this case contemplates it as possible. The suspicion that enemy ships are using neutral flags improperly can create no just presumption that all ships traversing a prescribed area are subject to the same suspicion. It is to determine exactly such questions that this government understands the right of visit and search to have been recognized.

This government has carefully noted the explanatory statement issued by the imperial German government at the same time with the proclamation of the German admiralty, and takes this occasion to remind the imperial German government very respectfully that the government of the United States is open to none of the criticisms for unneutral action to which the German government believe the governments of certain other neutral nations have laid themselves open; that the government of the United States has not consented to or acquiesced in any measures which may have been taken by the other belligerent nations in the present war which operate to restrain neutral trade, but has, on the contrary, taken in all such matters a position which warrants it in holding those governments responsible in the proper way for any untoward effects upon American shipping which the accepted principles of international law do not justify; and that it therefore regards itself as free in the present instance to take with a clear conscience and upon accepted principles the position indicated in this note.

If the commanders of German vessels of war should act upon the presumption that the flag of the United States was not being used in good faith and should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult for the government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between the two governments.

If such a deplorable situation should arise, the imperial German government can readily appreciate that the government of the United States would be constrained to hold the imperial German government to a strict accountability for such acts of their naval authorities and to take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas.

The government of the United States, in view of these considerations, which it urges with the greatest respect and with the sincere purpose of making sure that no misunderstanding may arise and no circumstance occur that might even cloud the intercourse of the two governments, expresses the confident hope and expectation that the imperial German government can and will give assurance that American citizens and their vessels will not be molested by the naval forces of Germany otherwise than by visit and search, though their vessels may be traversing the sea area delimited in the proclamation of the German admiralty.

It is added for the information of the imperial government that representations have been made to his Britannic majesty's government in respect to the unwarranted use of the American flag for the protection of British ships.

BRYAN.

W. H. PAGE.

Department of State, Washington, Feb. 10, 1915.

The department has been advised of the declaration of the German admiralty on Feb. 4, indicating that the British government had on Jan. 31 explicitly authorized the use of neutral flags on British merchant vessels presumably for the purpose of avoiding recognition by German naval forces. The department's attention has also been directed to reports in the press that the captain of the Lusitania, acting upon orders or information received from the British authorities, raised the American flag as his vessel approached the British coasts, in order to escape anticipated attacks by German submarines. Today's press reports also contain an alleged official statement of the foreign office defending the use of the flag of a neutral country by a belligerent vessel in order to escape capture or attack by an enemy.

Assuming that the foregoing reports are true, the government of the United States, reserving for future consideration the legality and propriety of the deceptive use of the flag of a neutral power in any case for the purpose of avoiding capture, desires very respectfully to point out to his Britannic majesty's government the serious consequences which may result to American vessels and American citizens if this practice is continued.

The occasional use of the flag of a neutral or an enemy under the stress of immediate pursuit and to deceive an approaching enemy, which appears by the press reports to be represented as the precedent and justification used to support this action, seems to this government a very different thing from an explicit sanction by a belligerent government for its merchant ships generally to fly the flag of a neutral power within certain portions of the high seas which are presumed to be frequented with hostile warships. The formal declaration of such a policy of general misuse of a neutral's flag jeopardizes the vessels of the neutral visiting those waters in a peculiar degree by raising the presumption that they are of belligerent nationality regardless of the flag which they may carry.

In view of the announced purpose of the German admiralty to engage in active naval operations in certain delimited sea areas adjacent to the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland, the government of the United States would view with anxious solicitude any general use of the flag of the United States by British vessels traversing those waters. A policy such as the one which his majesty's government is said to intend to adopt would, if the declaration of the German admiralty is put in force, it seems clear, afford no protection to British vessels, while it would be a serious and constant menace to the lives and vessels of American citizens.

The government of the United States, therefore, trusts that his majesty's government will do all in their power to restrain vessels of British nationality from the deceptive use of the flag of the United States in the sea area defined in the German declaration, since such practice would greatly endanger the vessels of a friendly power navigating those waters and would even seem to impose upon the government of Great Britain a measure of responsibility for the loss of American lives and vessels in case of an attack by a German naval force.

Please present a note to Sir Edward Grey in the sense of the foregoing and impress him with the grave concern which this government feels in the circumstances in regard to the safety of American vessels and lives in the war zone declared by the German admiralty.

You may add that this government is making earnest representations to the German government in regard to the danger to American vessels and citizens if the declaration of the German admiralty is put into effect.

BRYAN.

THE GERMAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.

Berlin, Feb. 16, 1915.

In reference to the note of the 12th instant, relative to the German measures respecting the theater of war in the waters surrounding England, the undersigned has the honor to reply to his excellency the ambassador of the United States, James W. Gerard, as follows:

The Imperial German government have examined the communication of the government of the United States in the same spirit of good will and friendship which seems to have prompted this communication.

The Imperial German government are in entire accord with the government of the United States that it is in the highest degree desirable for all parties to avoid the misunderstanding which might arise from the measures announced by the German admiralty and to avert the intrusion of events calculated to interrupt the most friendly relations which have so happily existed between the two governments up to this time.

On this assurance the German government believe that they may depend on full understanding on the part of the United States, all the more because the action announced by the German admiralty, as was dwelt upon at length in the note of the 4th instant, is in no wise directed against the legitimate trade and navigation of neutral states, but merely represents an act of self-defense which Germany's vital interests force her to take against England's method of conducting maritime war in defiance of international law, which no protest on the part of neutrals has availed to bring into accordance with the legal status generally recognized before the outbreak of hostilities.

In order to exclude all possible doubt on this cardinal point the German government beg to set forth once more, the actual situation.

Up to now Germany has scrupulously observed the existing provisions of international law relative to maritime war. In particular she assented without delay to the proposal made by the American government directly after the war began to ratify the declaration of London and embodied the contents thereof without change in her prize law, even without formally binding herself in this direction. The German government have adhered to these provisions, even where they conflicted with military interests. Our government at the same time have permitted the supply of food by Denmark to England until the present, although they could well have prevented this traffic by means of their naval forces.

In direct opposition to this, England has not shrunk from grave violations of international law wherever she could thereby cripple Germany's peaceable trade with neutral countries. It will not be necessary for the German government to go into great detail on this point, especially since the American note to the British government dated Dec. 23, 1914, which has been brought to their knowledge, has dealt with this point very fully if not very exhaustively on the ground of the experiences of months.

It is conceded that the intention of all these aggressions is to cut off Germany from all supplies and thereby to deliver up to death by famine a peaceful civilian population, a procedure contrary to law of war and every dictate of humanity.

The neutrals have not been able to prevent this interception of different kinds of trade with Germany contrary to international law. It is true that the American government have protested against England's procedure, and Germany is glad to acknowledge this, but in spite of this protest and the protest of the other neutral governments England has not allowed herself to be dissuaded from the course originally adopted. Thus, the American ship Wilhelmina was recently brought into port by England, although her cargo was destined solely for the civil population of Germany and was to be used only for this purpose according to an express declaration of the German government.

In this way the following has been created: Germany is to all intents and purposes cut off from overseas supplies with the toleration, tacit or protesting, of the neutrals regardless of whether it is a question of goods which are absolute contraband or only conditional contraband or not contraband at all, following the law generally recognized before the outbreak of the war. On the other hand, England with the indulgence of neutral governments is not only being provided with such goods as are not contraband or merely conditional contraband, namely, foodstuffs, raw material, et cetera, although these are treated by England when Germany is in question as absolute contraband, but also with goods which have been regularly and unquestionably acknowledged to be absolute contraband. The German government believe that they are obliged to point out very particularly and with the greatest emphasis that a trade in arms exists between American manufacturers and Germany's enemies which is estimated at many hundred million marks.

The German government have given due recognition to the fact that as a matter of form the exercise of rights and the toleration of wrong on the part of neutrals is limited by their pleasure alone and involves no formal breach of neutrality. The German government have not in consequence made any charge of formal breach of neutrality. The German government cannot, however, do otherwise, especially in the interest of absolute clearness in the relations between the two countries, than to emphasize that they, in common with the public opinion in Germany, feel themselves placed at a great disadvantage through the fact that the neutral powers have hitherto achieved no success or only an unmeaning success in their assertion of the right to trade with Germany, acknowledged to be legitimate by international law, whereas they make unlimited use of their right to tolerate trade in contraband with England and our other enemies. Conceded that it is the formal right of neutrals not to protect their legitimate trade with Germany and even to allow themselves knowingly and willingly to be induced by England to restrict such trade, it is on the other hand not less their good right, although unfortunately not exercised, to stop trade in contraband, especially the trade in arms, with Germany's enemies.

In view of this situation the German government see themselves compelled, after six months of patience and watchful waiting, to meet England's murderous method of conducting maritime war with drastic countermeasures. If England invokes the powers of famine as an ally in its struggle against Germany with the intention of leaving a civilized people the alternative of perishing in misery or submitting to the yoke of England's political and commercial will, the German government are to-day determined to take up the gauntlet and to appeal to the same grim ally. They rely on the neutrals who have hitherto tacitly or under protest submitted to the consequences, detrimental to themselves, of England's war of famine to display not less tolerance toward Germany, even if the German measures constitute new forms of maritime war, as has hitherto been the case with the English measures.

In addition to this the German government are determined to suppress with all the means at their disposal the supply of war material to England and her allies and assume at the same time that it is a matter of course that the neutral governments which have hitherto undertaken no action against the trade in arms with Germany's enemies do not intend to oppose the forcible suppression of this trade by Germany.

Proceeding from these points of view, the German admiralty has declared the zone prescribed by it the seat of war; it will obstruct this area of maritime war by mines wherever possible and also endeavor to destroy the merchant vessels of the enemy in any other way.

It is very far, indeed, from the intention of the German government, acting in obedience to these compelling circumstances, ever to destroy neutral lives and neutral property, but on the other hand they cannot be blind to the fact that dangers arise through the action to be carried out against England which menace without discrimination all trade within the area of maritime war. This applies as a matter of course to war mines, which place any ship approaching a mined area in danger, even if the limits of international law are adhered to most strictly.

The German government believe that they are all the more justified in the hope that the neutral powers will become reconciled with this, just as they have with the serious injury caused them thus far by England's measures, because it is their will to do everything in any way compatible with the accomplishment of their purpose for the protection of neutral shipping even within the area of maritime war.

They furnish the first proof of their good will by announcing the measures intended by them at a time not less than two weeks beforehand, in order to give neutral shipping an opportunity to make the necessary arrangements to avoid the threatening danger. The safest method of doing this is to stay away from the area of maritime war. Neutral ships entering the closed waters in spite of this announcement given so far in advance and which seriously impairs the accomplishment of the military purpose against England bear their own responsibility for any unfortunate accidents. The German government on their side expressly decline all responsibility for such accidents and their consequences.

Furthermore, the German government announced merely the destruction of enemy merchant vessels found within the area of maritime war and not the destruction of all merchant vessels, as the American government appear to have erroneously understood. This limitation which the German government have imposed upon themselves impairs the military purpose, especially since the presumption will prevail, even in the case of neutral ships, that they have contraband on board, in view of the interpretation of the idea of contraband in which the English government have indulged as regards Germany and which the German government will accordingly apply against England.

Naturally the imperial government are not willing to waive the right to establish the presence of contraband in the cargoes of neutral ships and, in cases requiring it, to take any action necessary on the grounds established. Finally, the German government are prepared to accord, in conjunction with the American government, the most earnest consideration to any measure that might be calculated to insure the safety of legitimate shipping of neutrals within the seat of war. They cannot, however, overlook the fact that all efforts in this direction are considerably hampered by two circumstances: First, by the misuse of the neutral flag by English merchant vessels, which in the meantime has probably been established beyond a doubt by the American government likewise; second, by the above mentioned trade in contraband, especially war materials, by neutral merchant vessels. In regard to the latter point, the German government ventures to hope that the American government upon reconsideration will see their way clear to a measure of intervention in accordance with the spirit of true neutrality.

As regards the first point, the secret order of the British admiralty has already been communicated to the American government by Germany. It recommends English merchant vessels to use neutral flags and has in the meantime been confirmed by a statement of the British foreign office which refers to the municipal law of England and characterizes such action as quite unobjectionable. The English merchant marine has followed this counsel without delay, as is probably known to the American government from the cases of the Lusitania and Laertes. Moreover, the British government have armed English merchant vessels and instructed them to resist by force the German submarines. In these circumstances it is very difficult for the German submarines to recognize neutral merchant vessels as such, for even a search will not be possible in the majority of cases, since the attacks to be anticipated in the case of a disguised English ship would expose the commander conducting a search and the boat itself to the danger of destruction.

The British government would then be in a position to render the German measures illusory if their merchant marine persists in the misuse of neutral flags and neutral vessels are not marked in some other manner admitting of no possible doubt. Germany must, in the exigency into which she has unlawfully been forced, make her measures effective at all events in order thereby to compel her adversary to conduct maritime warfare in accordance with international law and thus to re-establish the freedom of the seas which she has ever advocated and for which she is fighting likewise to-day.

The German government, therefore, welcomes the fact that the American government have made representations to the British government relative to the use of their flag contrary to law and give expression to the expectation that this action will cause England to respect the American flag in future.

In this expectation the commanders of the German submarines have been instructed, as was already stated in the note of 4th instant, to abstain from violence to American merchant vessels when they are recognizable as such.

In order to meet in the safest manner all the consequences of mistaking an American for a hostile merchant vessel the German government recommended that (although this would not apply in the case of danger from mines) the United States convoy their ships carrying peaceable cargoes and traversing the English seat of maritime war in order to make them recognizable. In this connection the German government believe it should be made a condition that only such ships should be convoyed as carry no merchandise which would have to be considered as contraband according to the interpretation applied by England against Germany. The German government are prepared to enter into immediate negotiations with the American government relative to the manner of convoy. They would, however, be particularly grateful if the American government would urgently advise their merchant vessels to avoid the English seat of maritime war at any rate until the flag question is settled.

The German government resign themselves to the confident hope that the American government will recognize the full meaning of the severe struggle which Germany is conducting for her very existence and will gain full understanding of the reasons which prompt Germany and the aims of the measures announced by her from the above explanations and promises.

The German government resign themselves to scrupulous consideration for neutrals hitherto practiced by them they have determined upon the measures planned only under the strongest compulsion of national self-preservation. Should the American government at the eleventh hour succeed in removing, by virtue of the weight which they have the right and ability to throw into the scales of the fate of peoples, the reasons which have made it the imperative duty of the German government to take the action indicated, should the American government in particular find a way to bring about the observation of the declaration of London on the part of the powers at war with Germany and thereby to render possible for Germany the legitimate supply of foodstuffs and industrial raw materials, the German government would recognize this as a service which could not be too highly estimated in favor of more humane conduct of war and would gladly draw the necessary conclusions from the new situation thus created.

The undersigned requests the ambassador to bring the above to the attention of the American government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, et cetera. VON JAGOW.

 AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
 (Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, Feb. 19, 1915.

Sir Edward Grey has just handed me the following memorandum since your telegram to him was given to the press in Washington. I consented to his proposal to give this memorandum out for publication in Saturday morning newspapers:

The memorandum communicated on the 11th February calls attention in courteous and friendly terms to the action of the captain of the British S. S. Lusitania in raising the flag of the United States of America when approaching British waters and says that the government of the United States feel a certain anxiety in considering the possibility of any general use of the flag of the United States by British vessels traversing those waters since the effect of such a policy might be to bring about a menace to the lives and vessels of United States citizens.

It was understood that the German government had announced their intention of sinking British merchant vessels at sight by torpedoes without giving any opportunity of making any provision for saving the lives of noncombatant crews and passengers. It was in consequence of this threat that the Lusitania raised the United States flag on her inward voyage and on her subsequent outward voyage. A request was made by the United States passengers who were embarking on board her that the United States flag should be hoisted presumably to insure their safety. Meanwhile the memorandum from your excellency had been received. His majesty's government did not give any advice to the company as to how to meet this request and it is understood that the Lusitania left Liverpool under the British flag.

It seems unnecessary to say more as regards the Lusitania in particular regard to the use of foreign flags by merchant vessels. The British merchant shipping act makes it clear that the use of the British flag by foreign merchant vessels is permitted in time of war for the purpose of escaping capture. It is believed that in the case of some other nations there is a similar recognition of the same practice with regard to their flags and that none have forbidden it. It would, therefore, be unreasonable to expect his majesty's government to pass legislation forbidding the use of foreign flags by British merchant vessels to avoid capture by the enemy. Now that the German government have announced their intention to sink merchant vessels at sight with their noncombatant crews, cargoes and papers, a proceeding hitherto regarded by the opinion of the world not as war, but as piracy, it is felt that the United States government could not fairly ask the British government to order British merchant vessels to forego the means—always hitherto permitted—of escaping not only capture but the much worse fate of sinking and destruction. Great Britain has always when neutral accorded to the vessels of other states at war liberty to use the British flag as a means of protection against capture, and instances are on record when United States vessels availed themselves of this facility during the American civil war. It would be contrary to fair expectation if now when the conditions are reversed the United States and neutral nations were to grudge to British ships liberty to take similar action. The British government have no intention of advising their merchant shipping to use foreign flags as general practice or to resort to them otherwise than for escaping capture or destruction.

The obligation upon a belligerent warship to ascertain definitely for itself the nationality and character of a merchant vessel before capturing it and "a fortiori" before sinking and destroying it has been universally recognized. If that obligation is fulfilled, hoisting a neutral flag on board a British vessel cannot possibly endanger neutral shipping and the British government hold that if loss to neutrals is caused by disregard of this obligation it is upon the enemy vessel disregarding it and upon the government giving orders that it should be disregarded that the sole responsibility for injury to neutrals ought to rest.  THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
 (Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Feb. 20, 1915.

You will please deliver to Sir Edward Grey the following identic note which we are sending England and Germany.

In view of the correspondence which has passed between this government and Great Britain and Germany respectively, relative to the declaration of a war zone by the German admiralty and the use of neutral flags by British merchant vessels, this government ventures to express the hope that the two belligerent governments may, through reciprocal cessions, find a basis for agreement which will relieve neutral ships engaged in peaceful commerce from the great dangers which they will incur in the high seas adjacent to the coasts of the belligerents.

The government of the United States respectfully suggests that an agreement in terms like the following might be entered into. This suggestion is not to be regarded as in any sense a proposal made by this government, for it of course fully recognizes that it is not its privilege to propose terms of agreement between Great Britain and Germany, even though the matter be one in which it and the people of the United States are directly and deeply interested. It is merely venturing to take the liberty which it hopes may be accorded a sincere friend desirous of embarrassing neither nation involved and of serving, if it may, the common interests of humanity. The course outlined is offered in the hope that it may draw forth the views and elicit the suggestions of the British and German governments on a matter of capital interest to the whole world.

Germany and Great Britain to agree:

1. That neither will sow any floating mines, whether upon the high seas or in territorial waters; that neither will plant on the high seas anchored mines except within cannon range of harbors for defensive purposes only, and that all mines shall bear the stamp of the government planting them and be so constructed as to become harmless if separated from their moorings.
2. That neither will use submarines to attack merchant vessels of any nationality except to enforce the right of visit and search.
3. That each will require their respective merchant vessels not to use neutral flags for the purpose of disguise or ruse de guerre.

Germany to agree:

That all importations of food or foodstuffs from the United States (and from such other neutral countries as may ask it) into Germany shall be consigned to agencies to be designated by the United States government; that these American agencies shall have entire charge and control without interference on the part of the German government of the receipt and distribution of such importations, and shall distribute them solely to retail dealers bearing licenses from the German government entitling them to receive and furnish such food and foodstuffs to noncombatants only; that any violation of the terms of the retailers' licenses shall work a forfeiture of their rights to receive such food and foodstuffs for this purpose, and that such food and foodstuffs will not be requisitioned by the German government for any purpose whatsoever or be diverted to the use of the armed forces of Germany.

Great Britain to agree:

That food and foodstuffs will not be placed upon the absolute contraband list and that shipments of such commodities will not be interfered with or detained by British authorities if consigned to agencies designated by the United States government in Germany for the receipt and distribution of such cargoes to licensed German retailers for distribution solely to the non-combatant population.

In submitting this proposed basis of agreement this government does not wish to be understood as admitting or denying any belligerent or neutral right established by the principles of international law, but would consider the agreement, if acceptable to the interested powers, a modus vivendi based upon expediency rather than legal right and as not binding upon the United States either in its present form or in a modified form until accepted by this government. AMBASSADOR GERARD TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Berlin, March 1, 1915.

Following is translation of the German reply: The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of the 22d instant that the imperial German government have taken note with great interest of the suggestion of the American government that certain principles for the conduct of maritime war on the part of Germany and England be agreed upon for the protection of neutral shipping. They see therein new evidence of the friendly feelings of the American government toward the German government which are fully reciprocated by Germany.

It is in accordance with Germany's wishes also to have maritime war conducted according to rules which without discriminately restricting one or the other of the belligerent powers in the use of their means of warfare are equally considerate of the interests of neutrals and the dictates of humanity. Consequently it was intimated in the German note of the 16th instant that observation of the declaration of London on the part of Germany's adversaries would create a new situation from which the German government would gladly draw the proper conclusions.

Proceeding from this view, the German government have carefully examined the suggestion of the American government and believe that they can actually see in it a suitable basis for the practical solution of the questions which have arisen.

With regard to the various points of the American note they beg to make the following remarks:

1. With regard to the sowing of mines, the German government would be willing to agree, as suggested, not to use floating mines and to have anchored mines constructed as indicated. Moreover, they agree to put the stamp of the government on all mines to be planted. On the other hand, it does not appear to them to be feasible for the belligerents wholly to forego the use of anchored mines for offensive purposes.

2. The German government would undertake not to use their submarines to attack mercantile of any flag except when necessary to enforce the right of visit and search. Should the enemy nationality of the vessel or the presence of contraband be ascertained submarine would proceed in accordance with the general rules of international law.

3. As provided in the American note, this restriction of the use of the submarines is contingent on the fact that enemy mercantile abstain from the use of the neutral flag and other neutral distinctive marks. It would appear to be a matter of course that such mercantile also abstain from arming themselves and from all resistance by force, since such procedure contrary to international law would render impossible any action of the submarines in accordance with international law.

4. The regulation of legitimate importations of food into Germany suggested by the American government appears to be in general acceptable. Such regulation would, of course, be confined to importations by sea, but that would on the other hand include indirect importations by way of neutral ports. The German government would, therefore, be willing to make the declarations of the nature provided in the American note so that the use of the imported food and foodstuffs solely by the noncombatant population would be guaranteed. The imperial government must, however, in addition (*) having the importation of other raw material used by the economic system of noncombatants including forage permitted. To that end the enemy governments would have to permit the free entry into Germany of the raw material mentioned in the free list of the declaration of London and to treat materials included in the list of conditional contraband according to the same principles as food and foodstuffs.

The German government venture to hope that the agreement for which the American government have paved the way may be reached after due consideration of the remarks made above, and that in this way peaceable neutral shipping and trade will not have to suffer any more than is absolutely necessary from the unavoidable effects of maritime war. These effects could be still further reduced if, as was pointed out in the German note of the 16th instant, some way could be found to exclude the shipping of munitions of war from neutral countries to belligerents on ships of any nationality.

The German government must, of course, reserve a definite statement of their position until such time as they may receive further information from the American government enabling them to see what obligations the British government are on their part willing to assume.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion, etc. (Signed) VON JAGOW.

Dated Foreign Office, Berlin, Feb. 28, 1915.

*Apparent omission.

GERARD.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(A declaration from the French ambassador in practically identical language was presented at the department at the same time.)

Germany has declared that the English channel, the north and west coasts of France and the waters around the British isles are a war area and has officially notified that all enemy ships found in that area will be destroyed and that neutral vessels may be exposed to danger. This is in effect a claim to torpedo at sight, without regard to the safety of the crew or passengers, any merchant vessel under any flag. As it is not in the power of the German admiralty to maintain any surface craft in these waters, this attack can only be delivered by submarine agency.

The law and custom of nations in regard to attacks on commerce have always presumed that the first duty of the captor of a merchant vessel is to bring it before a prize court where it may be tried, where the regularity of the capture may be challenged and where neutrals may recover their cargoes. The sinking of prizes is in itself a questionable act to be resorted to only in extraordinary circumstances and after provision has been made for the safety of all the crew or passengers, if there are passengers on board. The responsibility for discriminating between neutral and enemy vessels, and between neutral and enemy cargo, obviously rests with the attacking ship, whose duty it is to verify the status and character of the vessel and cargo and to preserve all papers before sinking or even capturing it. So also is the humane duty of providing for the safety of the crews of merchant vessels, whether neutral or enemy, an obligation upon every belligerent.

It is upon this basis that all previous discussions of the law for regulating warfare at sea have proceeded. A German submarine, however, fulfills none of these obligations; she enjoys no local command of the waters in which she operates; she does not take her captures within the jurisdiction of a prize court; she carries no prize crew which she can put on board a prize; she uses no effective means of discriminating between a neutral and an enemy vessel; she does not receive on board for safety the crew and passengers of the vessel she sinks; her methods of warfare are, therefore, entirely outside the scope of any of the international instruments regulating operations against commerce in time of war. The German declaration substitutes indiscriminate destruction for regulated capture. Germany is adopting these methods against peaceful traders and noncombatant crews with the avowed object of preventing commodities of all kinds, including food for the civil population, from reaching or leaving the British isles or northern France.

Her opponents are, therefore, driven to frame retaliatory measures in order in their turn to prevent commodities of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany. These measures will, however, be enforced by the British and French governments without risk to neutral ships or to neutral or noncombatant life and in strict observance of the dictates of humanity. The British and French governments will, therefore, hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership or origin. It is not intended to confiscate such vessels or cargoes unless they would otherwise be liable to condemnation. The treatment of vessels and cargoes which have sailed before this date will not be affected.

CECIL SPRING-RICE.

British Embassy, Washington, March 1, 1915.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, March 5, 1915.

In regard to the recent communications received from the British and French governments concerning restraints upon commerce with Germany, please communicate with the British foreign office in the sense following:

The difficulty of determining action upon the British and French declarations of intended retaliation upon commerce with Germany lies in the nature of the proposed measures in their relation to commerce by neutrals.

While it appears that the intention is to interfere with and take into custody all ships, both outgoing and incoming, trading with Germany, which is in effect a blockade of German ports, the rule of blockade that a ship attempting to enter or leave a German port regardless of the character of its cargo may be condemned is not asserted.

The language of the declaration is: "The British and French governments will, therefore, hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership or origin. It is not intended to confiscate such vessels or cargoes unless they would otherwise be liable to condemnation."

The first sentence claims a right pertaining only to a state of blockade. The last sentence proposes a treatment of ships and cargoes as if no blockade existed. The two together present a proposed course of action previously unknown to international law.

As a consequence, neutrals have no standard by which to measure their rights or to avoid danger to their ships and cargoes. The paradoxical situation thus created should be changed and the declaring powers ought to assert whether they rely upon the rules governing a blockade or the rules applicable when no blockade exists.

The declaration presents other perplexities.

The last sentence quoted indicates that the rules of contraband are to be applied to cargoes detained. The rule covering noncontraband articles carried in neutral bottoms is that the cargoes shall be released and the ships allowed to proceed. This rule cannot, under the first sentence quoted, be applied as to destination. What then is to be done with a cargo of non-contraband goods detained under the declaration? The same question may be asked as to conditional contraband cargoes.

The foregoing comments apply to cargoes destined for Germany. Cargoes coming out of German ports present another problem under the terms of the declaration. Under the rules governing enemy exports only goods owned by enemy subjects in enemy bottoms are subject to seizure and condemnation. Yet by the declaration it is purposed to seize and take into port all goods of enemy "ownership and origin." The word "origin" is particularly significant. The origin of goods destined to neutral territory on neutral ships is not and never has been a ground for forfeiture except in case a blockade is declared and maintained. What then would the seizure amount to in the present case except to delay the delivery of the goods? The declaration does not indicate what disposition would be made of such cargoes if owned by a neutral or if owned by an enemy subject. Would a different rule be applied according to ownership? If so, upon what principles of international law would it rest? And upon what rule if no blockade is declared and maintained could the cargo of a neutral ship sailing out of a German port be condemned? If it is not condemned, what other legal course is there but to release it?

While this government is fully alive to the possibility that the methods of modern naval warfare, particularly in the use of the submarine for both defensive and offensive operations, may make the former means of maintaining a blockade a physical impossibility, it feels that it can be urged with great force that there should be also some limit to "the radius of activity," and especially so if this action by the belligerents can be construed to be a blockade. It would certainly create a serious state of affairs if, for example, an American vessel laden with a cargo of German origin should escape the British patrol in European waters only to be held up by a cruiser off New York and taken into Halifax.

AMBASSADOR SHARP TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Paris, March 14, 1915.

French government replies as follows:

In a letter dated March 7 your excellency was good enough to draw my attention to the views of the government of the United States regarding the recent communications from the French and British governments concerning a restriction to be laid upon commerce with Germany. According to your excellency's letter, the declaration made by the allied governments presents some uncertainty as regards its application, concerning which the government of the United States desires to be enlightened in order to determine what attitude it should take.

At the same time your excellency notified me that while granting the possibility of using new methods of retaliation against the new use to which submarines have been put, the government of the United States was somewhat apprehensive that the allied belligerents might (if their action is to be construed as constituting a blockade) capture in waters near America any ships which might have escaped the cruisers patrolling European waters. In acknowledging receipt of your excellency's communication I have the honor to inform you that the government of the republic has not failed to consider this point as presented by the government of the United States, and I beg to specify clearly the conditions of application, as far as my government is concerned, of the declaration of the allied governments. As well set forth by the federal government the old methods of blockade cannot be entirely adhered to in view of the use Germany has made of her submarines, and also by reason of the geographical situation of that country. In answer to the challenge to the neutrals, as well as to its own adversaries, contained in the declaration by which the German imperial government stated that it considered the seas surrounding Great Britain and the French coast on the channel as a military zone, and warned neutral vessels not to enter the same on account of the danger they would run, the allied governments have been obliged to examine what measures they could adopt to interrupt all maritime communication with the German empire and thus keep it blockaded by the naval power of the two allies, at the same time, however, safeguarding as much as possible the legitimate interests of neutral powers and respecting the laws of humanity, which no crime of their enemy will induce them to violate.

The government of the republic, therefore, reserves to itself the right of bringing into a French or allied port any ship carrying a cargo presumed to be of German origin, destination or ownership, but it will not go to the length of seizing any neutral ship except in case of contraband. The discharged cargo shall not be confiscated. In the event of a neutral proving his lawful ownership of merchandise destined to Germany, he shall be entirely free to dispose of same, subject to certain conditions. In case the owner of the goods is a German they shall simply be sequestered during the war.

Merchandise of enemy origin shall only be sequestered when, at the same time, the property of an enemy; merchandise belonging to neutrals shall be held at the disposal of its owner to be returned to the port of departure.

As your excellency will observe, these measures, while depriving the enemy of important resources, respect the rights of neutrals and will not in any way jeopardize private property, as even the enemy owner will only suffer from the suspension of the enjoyment of his rights during the term of hostilities.

The government of the republic, being desirous of allowing neutrals every facility to enforce their claims, has decided to give the prize court (an independent tribunal) cognizance of these questions, and in order to give the neutrals as little trouble as possible it has specified that the prize court shall give sentence within eight days, counting from the date on which the case shall have been brought before it.

I do not doubt, Mr. Ambassador, that the federal government, comparing on the one hand the unspeakable violence with which the German military government threatens neutrals, the criminal actions unknown in maritime annals already perpetrated against neutral property and ships, and even against the lives of neutral subjects or citizens, and on the other hand, the measures adopted by the allied governments of France and Great Britain respecting the laws of humanity and the rights of individuals, will readily perceive that the latter have not overstepped their strict rights as belligerents.

Finally, I am anxious to assure you that it is not and it has never been the intention of the government of the republic to extend the action of its cruisers against enemy merchandise beyond European seas, the Mediterranean included.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, London, March 15, 1915.
Following is the full text of a memorandum dated March 13, which Grey handed me to-day:
On the 22d of February last, I received a communication from your excellency of the identic note addressed to his majesty's government and to Germany, respecting an agreement on certain points as to the conduct of the war at sea. The reply to the German government to this note has been published and it is not understood from the reply that the German government are prepared to abandon the practice of sinking British merchant vessels by submarines, and it is evident from their reply that they will not abandon the use of mines for offensive purposes on the high seas as contrasted with the use of mines for defensive purposes only within cannon range of their own harbors, as suggested by the government of the United States. This being so, it might appear unnecessary for the British government to make any further reply than to take note of the German answer. We desire, however, to take the opportunity of making a fuller statement of the whole position and of our feeling with regard to it. We recognize with sympathy the desire of the government of the United States to see the European war conducted in accordance with the previously recognized rules of international law and the dictates of humanity. It is thus that the British forces have conducted the war and we are not aware that these forces, either naval or military, can have laid to their charge any improper proceedings, either in the conduct of hostilities or in the treatment of prisoners or wounded. On the German side it has been very different.

1. The treatment of civilian inhabitants in Belgium and the north of France has been made public by the Belgian and French governments and by those who have had experience of it at first hand. Modern history affords no precedent for the sufferings that have been inflicted on the defenseless and noncombatant population in the territory that has been in German military occupation. Even the food of the population was confiscated until in Belgium an international commission, largely influenced by American generosity and conducted under American auspices, came to the relief of the population and secured from the German government a promise to spare what food was still left in the country, though the Germans still continue to make levies in money upon the defenseless population for the support of the German army.

2. We have from time to time received most terrible accounts of the barbarous treatment to which British officers and soldiers have been exposed after they have been taken prisoner while being conveyed to German prison camps; one or two instances have already been given to the United States government founded upon authentic and first hand evidence which is beyond doubt. Some evidence has been received of the hardships to which British prisoners of war are subjected in the prison camps, contrasting, we believe, most unfavorably with the treatment of German prisoners in this country. We have proposed, with the consent of the United States government, that a commission of United States officers should be permitted in each country to inspect the treatment of prisoners of war. The United States government have been unable to obtain any reply from the German government to this proposal and we remain in continuing anxiety and apprehension as to the treatment of British prisoners of war in Germany.

3. At the very outset of the war a German mine layer was discovered laying a mine field on the high seas. Further mine fields have been laid from time to time without warning and so far as we know are still being laid on the high seas, and many neutral as well as British vessels have been sunk by them.

4. At various times during the war German submarines have stopped and sunk British merchant vessels, thus making the sinking of merchant vessels a general practice, though it was admitted previously, if at all, only as an exception, the general rule to which the British government have adhered being that merchant vessels, if captured, must be taken before a prize court. In one case already quoted in a note to the United States government, a neutral vessel carrying foodstuffs to an unfortified town in Great Britain has been sunk. Another case is now reported in which a German armed cruiser has sunk an American vessel, the William P. Frye, carrying a cargo of wheat from Seattle to Queenstown. In both cases the cargoes were presumably destined for the civil population. Even the cargoes in such circumstances should not have been condemned without the decision of a prize court, much less should the vessels have been sunk. It is to be noted that both these cases occurred before the detention by the British authorities of the Wilhelmina and her cargo of foodstuffs which the German government allege is the justification for their own action. The Germans have announced their intention of sinking British merchant vessels by torpedo without notice and without any provision for the safety of the crew. They have already carried out this intention in the case of neutral as well as of British vessels, and a number of noncombatant and innocent lives on British vessels, unarmed and defenseless, have been destroyed in this way.

5. Unfortified, open and defenseless towns, such as Scarborough, Yarmouth and Whitby, have been deliberately and wantonly bombarded by German ships of war, causing in some cases considerable loss of civilian life, including women and children.

6. German air craft have dropped bombs on the east coast of England where there were no military or strategic points to be attacked. On the other hand, I am aware of but two criticisms that have been made on British action in all these respects: (1) It is said that the British naval authorities also have laid some anchored mines on the high seas. They have done so, but the mines were anchored and so constructed that they would be harmless if they went adrift and no mines whatever were laid by the British naval authorities till many weeks after the Germans had made a regular practice of laying mines on the high seas. (2) It is said that the British government have departed from the view of international law which they had previously maintained that foodstuffs destined for the civil population should never be interfered with, this charge being founded on the submission to a prize court of the cargo of the Wilhelmina. The special considerations affecting this cargo have already been presented in a memorandum to the United States government and I need not repeat them here. Inasmuch as the stoppage of all foodstuffs is an admitted consequence of blockade, it is obvious that there can be no universal rule based on considerations of morality and humanity which is contrary to this practice. The right to stop foodstuffs destined for the civil population must, therefore, in any case be admitted if any effective blockade is to be maintained. If the enemy is drawn, announced and maintained. Moreover, independently of rights arising from belligerent action in the nature of blockade, some other nations, differing from the opinion of the governments of the United States and Great Britain, have held that to stop the food of the civil population is a natural and legitimate method of bringing pressure to bear on an enemy country as it is upon the defense of a besieged town. It is also upheld on the authority of both Prince Bismarck and Count Caprivi, and, therefore, presumably is not repugnant to German morality. The following are the quotations from Prince Bismarck and Count Caprivi on this point. Prince Bismarck in answering in 1885 an application from the Kiel chamber of commerce for a statement of the view of the German government on the question of the right to declare as contraband foodstuffs that were not intended for military forces, said: "I refer to the chamber of commerce that any disadvantage our commercial and carrying interests may suffer by the treatment of rice as contraband of war does not justify our opposing a measure which it has been thought fit to take in carrying on a foreign war. Every war is a calamity which entails evil consequences, not only on the combatants, but also on neutrals. These evils may easily be increased by the interference of a neutral power with the way in which a third carries on the war to the disadvantage of the subjects of the interfering power and by this means German commerce might be weighted with far heavier losses than a transitory prohibition of the rice trade in Chinese waters. The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enemy, and is a justifiable step in war if impartially enforced against all neutral ships." Count Caprivi, during a discussion in the German Reichstag on the 4th of March, 1892, on the subject of the importance of international protection for private property at sea, made the following statements: "A country may be dependent for her food or for her raw products upon her trade. In fact, it may be absolutely necessary to destroy the enemy's trade." * * * "The private introduction of provisions into Paris was prohibited during the siege, and in the same way a nation would be justified in preventing the import of food and raw produce." The government of Great Britain have frankly declared, in concert with the government of France, their intention to meet the German attempt to stop all supplies of every kind from leaving or entering British or French ports by themselves stopping supplies going to or from Germany for this end. The British fleet has instituted a blockade, effectively controlling by cruiser "cordon" all passage to and from Germany by sea. The difference between the two policies is, however, that while our object is the same as that of Germany, we propose to attain it without sacrificing neutral ships or noncombatant lives or inflicting upon neutrals the damage that must be entailed when a vessel and its cargo are sunk without notice, examination or trial. I must emphasize again that this measure is a natural and necessary consequence of the unprecedented methods repugnant to all law and morality, which have been described. The fact that Germany began to adopt at the very outset of the war and the effects of which have been constantly accumulating. PAGE.

 AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
 (Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, March 15, 1915.
 Following is the full text of a note, dated today, and an order in council I have just received from Grey:

1. His majesty's government have had under careful consideration the inquiries which, under instructions from your government, your excellency addressed to me on the 8th instant regarding the scope and mode of application of the measures foreshadowed in the British and French declarations of the 1st of March for restricting the trade of Germany. Your excellency explained and illustrated by reference to certain contingencies the difficulty of the United States government in adopting a definite attitude toward these measures by reason of uncertainty regarding their bearing upon the commerce of neutral countries.

2. I can at once assure your excellency that subject to the paramount necessity of restricting German trade his majesty's government have made it their first aim to minimize inconvenience to neutral commerce. From the accompanying copy of the order in council, which is to be published to-day, you will observe that a wide discretion is afforded to the prize court in dealing with the trade of neutrals in such manner as may in the circumstances be deemed just and that full provision is made to facilitate claims by persons interested in any goods placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under the order. I apprehend that the perplexities to which your excellency refers will for the most part be dissipated by the perusal of this document and that it is only necessary for me to add certain explanatory observations.

3. The effect of the order in council is to confer certain powers upon the executive officers of his majesty's government. The extent to which those powers will be actually exercised and the degree of severity with which the measures of blockade authorized will be put into operation are matters which will depend on the administrative orders issued by the government and the decisions of the authorities specially charged with the duty of dealing with individual ships and cargoes, according to the merits of each case. The United States government may rest assured that the instructions to be issued by his majesty's government to the fleet and to the customs officials and executive committees concerned will impress upon them the duty of acting with the utmost dispatch consistent with the object in view and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as may be compatible with that object, which is, succinctly stated, to establish a blockade to prevent vessels from carrying goods for or coming from Germany.

His majesty's government have felt most reluctant at the moment of initiating a policy of blockade to exact from neutral ships all the penalties attaching to a breach of blockade. In their desire to alleviate the burden which the existence of a state of war at sea must inevitably impose on neutral sea-borne commerce, they declare their intention to refrain altogether from the exercise of the right to confiscate ships or cargoes, which belligerents have always claimed in respect of breaches of blockade. They restrict their claim to the stopping of cargoes destined for or coming from the enemy's territory.

5. As regards cotton, full particulars of the arrangements contemplated have already been explained. It will be admitted that every possible regard has been had to the legitimate interests of the American cotton trade.

6. Finally, in reply to the penultimate paragraph of your excellency's note, I have the honor to state that it is not intended to interfere with neutral vessels carrying enemy cargo of noncontraband nature outside European waters, including the Mediterranean.

Order in Council.

Whereas, the German government has issued certain orders which, in violation of the usages of war, purport to declare the waters surrounding the united kingdom a military area, in which all British and allied merchant vessels will be destroyed, irrespective of the safety of the lives of passengers and crew, and in which neutral shipping will be exposed to similar danger in view of the uncertainties of naval warfare; and,

Whereas, in a memorandum accompanying the said orders neutrals are warned against intrusting crews, passengers or goods to British or allied ships;

Whereas, such attempts on the part of the enemy give to his majesty an unquestionable right of retaliation; and,

Whereas, his majesty has therefore decided to adopt further measures in order to prevent commodities of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany, though such measures will be enforced without risk to neutral ships or to neutral or noncombatant life and in strict observance of the dictates of humanity; and,

Whereas, the allies of his majesty are associated with him in the steps now to be announced for restricting further the commerce of Germany;

His majesty is therefore pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order and it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. No merchant vessel which sailed from her port of departure after the 1st of March, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage to any German port.

Unless the vessel receives a pass enabling her to proceed to some neutral or allied port to be named in the pass, goods on board any such vessel must be discharged in a British port and placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court. Goods so discharged, not being contraband of war, shall, if not requisitioned for the use of his majesty, be restored by order of the court, upon such terms as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just, to the person entitled thereto.

2. No merchant vessel which sailed from any German port after the 1st March, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage with any goods on board laden at such port.

All goods laden at such port must be discharged in a British or allied port. Goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and, if not requisitioned for the use of his majesty, shall be detained or sold under the direction of the prize court. The proceeds of goods so sold shall be paid into court and dealt with in such manner as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just.

Provided, that no proceeds of the sale of such goods shall be paid out of court until the conclusion of peace, except on the application of the proper officer of the crown, unless it be shown that the goods had become neutral property before the issue of this order.

Provided also, that nothing herein shall prevent the release of neutral property laden at such enemy port on the application of the proper officer of the crown.

3. Every merchant vessel which sailed from her port of departure after the 1st March, 1915, on her way to a port other than a German port, carrying goods with an enemy destination, or which are enemy property, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port. Any goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and, unless they are contraband of war, shall, if not requisitioned for the use of his majesty, be restored by order of the court, upon such terms as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just to the person entitled thereto.

Provided, that this article shall not apply in any case falling within articles 2 or 4 of this order.

4. Every merchant vessel which sailed from a port other than a German port after the 1st March, 1915, having on board goods which are of enemy origin or are enemy property, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port. Goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and if not requisitioned for the use of his majesty shall be detained or sold under the direction of the prize court. The proceeds of goods so sold shall be paid into court and dealt with in such manner as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just.

Provided, that no proceeds of sale of such goods shall be paid out of court until the conclusion of peace except on the application of the proper officer of the crown, unless it be shown that the goods had become neutral property before the issue of this order.

Provided also, that nothing herein shall prevent the release of neutral property of enemy origin on the application of the proper officer of the crown.

5. Any person claiming to be interested in, or to have any claim in respect of, any goods (not being contraband of war) placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under this order, or in the proceeds of such goods, may forthwith issue a writ in the prize court against the proper officer of the crown and apply for an order that the goods should be restored to him, or that their proceeds should be paid to him, or for such other order as the circumstances of the case may require.

The practice and procedure of the prize court shall, so far as applicable, be followed mutatis mutandis in any proceedings consequential upon this order.

6. A merchant vessel which has cleared for a neutral port from a British or allied port, or which has been allowed to pass, having an ostensible destination to a neutral port, and proceeds to an enemy port, shall, if captured on any subsequent voyage, be liable to condemnation.

7. Nothing in this order shall be deemed to affect the liability of any vessel or goods to capture or condemnation independently of this order.

8. Nothing in this order shall prevent the relaxation of the provisions of this order in respect of the merchant vessels of any country which declares that no commerce intended for or originating in Germany or belonging to German subjects shall enjoy the protection of its flag.

AMBASSADOR SHARP TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
(Extract).

American Embassy, Paris, March 30, 1915.
Sir: I have the honor to inclose to you herewith the text of a decree, dated the 13th instant, relative to the treatment of merchandise belonging to subjects of the German empire, or coming from Germany, or shipped to Germany, having gone to sea after the promulgation of this decree. Preceding this decree is the text of a report, dated the 12th instant, made by the ministers for foreign affairs, finance, war and marine, to the president of the republic and following it is the text of an official declaration, dated the 1st instant, both relative to the decree above mentioned.

I have, etc.,

WM. G. SHARP.

(Inclosure 1—Translation.)

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Ministry for Foreign Affairs, Paris, March 12, 1915.

Mr. President: The German government has decreed certain measures which in violation of the usages of war are aimed at declaring the waters which encircle northern France and the united kingdom a military zone in which all allied merchant vessels shall be destroyed without regard for the lives of the crew and the noncombatant passengers and in which neutral shipping will be exposed to the same dangers.

In a memorandum accompanying the publication of the aforesaid measures neutrals are warned not to embark sailors, passengers or cargo on ships belonging to the allies.

Such pretensions on the part of the enemy give to the allied governments the right to respond by preventing every kind of merchandise from reaching or leaving Germany. However, the allied governments never intend to follow their enemy in the cruel and barbarous methods of which he habitually makes use, and the measures to which they have been obliged to have recourse shall not in their intention carry any risk for neutral vessels or for the lives of neutrals or noncombatants and shall be applied in strict conformity with the laws of humanity.

It is under these conditions and in this spirit that the joint declaration hereto annexed, notified to the allied governments on March 1, 1915, has been conceived, and in which are drafted the terms of the decree which we have the honor to submit for your high approval.

We beg you to accept, Mr. President, the assurances of our profound respect.

DECREE.

The president of the French republic on the report of the minister for foreign affairs, the minister of finance, the minister of war and the minister of marine decrees:

Article 1. All goods belonging to subjects of the German empire, either shipped from or to Germany and having taken the sea since the promulgation of this present decree, shall be stopped by the cruisers of the republic.

All territory occupied by the German armed forces is assimilated to German territory.

Art. 2. All articles and goods either of German brand or manufacture, or made in Germany, the products of German soil, as well as all articles and merchandise, whatsoever the point of departure of which, either direct or in transit, is in German territory, shall be considered as merchandise coming from Germany.

However, the present stipulation shall not apply to articles or merchandise which the subject of a neutral country may prove to have brought lawfully into a neutral country prior to the promulgation of the present decree or of which he may prove that he was in regular and lawful possession prior to the said promulgation.

Art. 2. All articles and merchandise whatsoever shipped either direct or in transit to Germany or to a country close to Germany, whenever the documents accompanying said articles or merchandise shall not show proof that their ultimate and true destination is in a neutral country, shall be considered as merchandise destined for Germany.

Art. 4. Neutral vessels on board of which shall be found merchandise falling within article 1 shall be conducted to a French or allied port. In the event of the vessel being brought to a French port the merchandise shall be unloaded unless otherwise provided as hereinafter stipulated. The vessel shall afterward be liberated.

All merchandise recognized as belonging to German subjects shall be placed under sequestration or sold, the proceeds thereof being deposited at the Caisse des Depots et Consignations until the conclusion of peace to the account of the persons entitled thereto.

All merchandise belonging to neutrals and coming from Germany shall be held at the disposal of their neutral owners to be reshipped to their port of departure within a delay which shall be determined. After expiration of the said delay the said merchandise shall be subject to requisition or sold for the account and at the expense and risk of the owners.

Merchandise belonging to neutrals and bound for Germany shall be held at the disposal of the neutral owners, either to be returned to the port of departure or to be sent to any other French, allied or neutral port as may be authorized. In either case a period of time shall be fixed, at the expiration of which the merchandise shall be subject to requisition or sold for the account and at the expense and risk of the owner.

Art. 5. In exceptional cases, at the suggestion of the minister for foreign affairs, approved by the minister of war, the minister of marine may grant authorization for the passage of a specified cargo or a certain special category of merchandise destined to or coming from a specified neutral country.

Goods coming from Germany shall only be authorized to pass when they shall have been loaded in a neutral port after having paid the customs duty of the neutral country.

Art. 6. Nothing in this decree shall be deemed to affect the provisions decreed regarding merchandise declared absolute or conditional contraband of war.

Art. 7. The question as to whether the captured merchandise belongs to German subjects or is bound to or from Germany shall be decided before a prize court as hereinafter provided.

Within two days from the arrival of the captured ship, the ship's papers and other documents justifying the capture shall be sent by the prize service of the port through the minister of marine to the commissioner representing the government at the prize court, who will immediately notify the president of the said court.

The president shall convene the court, which shall declare sentence upon the said document within eight days of the registration of the dossier at the court. Notwithstanding the said delay, the court shall always be entitled to order any investigation which may appear to it advisable and to grant, if necessary, to the parties who may so demand, sufficient time to justify their rights.

The decision of the prize court shall be transmitted to the minister of marine, who shall be directed to execute same.

Art. 8. The minister for foreign affairs, the minister of finance, the minister of war and the minister of marine shall be directed, in so far as they are respectively concerned, to execute the present decree.

Annex.

DECLARATION.

Germany has declared the English channel, the northern and western coasts of France as well as the waters surrounding the British Isles to be a "war zone," and has officially proclaimed that "all enemy vessels found in this zone will be destroyed and that neutral vessels there might be in danger." This is in reality a claim to torpedo at sight, without regard for the safety of crew and passengers, any merchant vessel under any flag. As it is not in the power of the German admiralty to maintain any vessel on the surface in these waters, this attack can only be carried out by submarine means. International law and the custom of nations regarding attack against commerce have always presumed that the first duty of the captor of a merchant vessel is to take it before a prize court where it can be judged, where regularity of the capture can be determined and where neutrals may recover their cargo. To sink a captured vessel is in itself a questionable act to which recourse can be had only under extraordinary circumstances and after measures have been taken to assure the safety of all the crew and the passengers, if there are passengers on board. The responsibility of distinguishing between neutral and enemy cargo as well as between neutral and enemy vessels is manifestly incumbent on the attacking vessel, whose duty it is to verify the status and the character of the vessel and its cargo as well as to place all papers in safety before sinking or even making a capture. Also the duty toward humanity consisting in assuring the safety of crews of merchant vessels, whether they are neutral or enemy, is an obligation for every belligerent. It is on this basis that all previous discussions of the law aiming at regulating the conduct of war at sea have been conducted.

In fact, a German submarine is incapable of fulfilling any one of these obligations. It exercises no local power on the waters in which it operates. It does not bring its capture within the jurisdiction of a prize court. It does not carry any prize crew which it can put aboard a prize. It employs no effective means of distinguishing between a neutral and an enemy vessel. It does not, by taking them on board, assure the safety of the crew and passengers of the vessel which it sinks. Its methods of war are consequently entirely outside the observance of all international texts governing operations against commerce in time of war. The German declaration substitutes for regulated capture blind destruction.

Germany adopts these methods against peaceful merchants and noncombatant crews with the avowed intention of preventing merchandise of every kind (including provisions for feeding the civil population) from entering or leaving the British Isles and northern France. Her adversaries are consequently forced to have recourse to measures of retaliation so as to prevent reciprocally merchandise of all kinds from reaching or leaving Germany. However, these measures will be enforced by the French and British governments without risk either for the vessels or the lives of neutrals and of noncombatants, and in strict conformity with humane principles.

Consequently, the French government and the British government consider themselves free to stop and conduct into their ports vessels carrying merchandise presumably destined for the enemy, property of the enemy or coming from the enemy. These vessels will not be confiscated unless they shall be liable to be condemned for other reasons. The treatment of vessels and cargoes which have gone to sea before this date will not be modified.

March 1, 1915.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, March 30, 1915.
You are instructed to deliver the following to his majesty's government:

The government of the United States has given careful consideration to the subjects treated in the British notes of March 13 and March 15, and to the British order in council of the latter date.

These communications contain matters of grave importance to neutral nations. They appear to menace their rights of trade and intercourse not only with belligerents but also with one another. They call for frank comment in order that misunderstandings may be avoided. The government of the United States deems it its duty, therefore, speaking in the sincerest spirit of friendship, to make its own view and position with regard to them unmistakably clear.

The order in council of the 15th of March would constitute, were its provisions to be actually carried into effect as they stand, a practical assertion of unlimited belligerent rights over neutral commerce within the whole European area, and an almost unqualified denial of the sovereign rights of the nations now at peace.

This government takes it for granted that there can be no question what those rights are. A nation's sovereignty over its own ships and citizens under its own flag on the high seas in time of peace is, of course, unlimited, and that sovereignty suffers no diminution in time of war, except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations has limited it by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights which it is conceded may be exercised by nations which are at war.

A belligerent nation has been conceded the right of visit and search and the right of capture and condemnation, if upon examination a neutral vessel is found to be engaged in unnatural service or to be carrying contraband of war intended for the enemy's government or armed forces. It has been conceded the right to establish and maintain a blockade of an enemy's ports and coasts and to capture and condemn any vessel taken in trying to break the blockade. It is even conceded the right to detain and take to its own ports for judicial examination all vessels which it suspects for substantial reasons to be engaged, in unnatural or contraband service and to condemn them if the suspicion is sustained. But such rights, long clearly defined both in doctrine and practice, have hitherto been held to be the only permissible exceptions to the principle of universal equality of sovereignty on the high seas as between belligerents and nations not engaged in war.

It is confidently assumed that his majesty's government will not deny that it is a rule sanctioned by general practice that, even though a blockade should exist and the doctrine of contraband as to unblockaded territory be rigidly enforced, innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or breach of blockade, much less to detention, requisition or confiscation.

Moreover, the rules of the declaration of Paris of 1856—among them that free ships make free goods—will hardly at this day be disputed by the signatories of that solemn agreement.

His majesty's government, like the government of the United States, have often and explicitly held that these rights represent the best usage of warfare in the dealings of belligerents with neutrals at sea. In this connection I desire to direct attention to the opinion of the chief justice of the United States in the case of the Peterhof, which arose out of the civil war, and to the fact that that opinion was unanimously sustained in the award of the arbitration commission of 1871, to which the case was presented at the request of Great Britain. From that time to the declaration of London of 1909, adopted with modifications by the order in council of the 23d of October last, these rights have not been seriously questioned by the British government. And no claim on the part of Great Britain of any justification for interfering with these clear rights of the United States and its citizens as neutrals could be admitted. To admit it would be to assume an attitude of unneutrality toward the present enemies of Great Britain which would be obviously inconsistent with the solemn obligations of this government in the present circumstances, and for Great Britain to make such a claim would be for her to abandon and set at naught the principles for which she has consistently and earnestly contended in other times and circumstances.

The note of his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the order in council, and which bears the same date, notifies the government of the United States of the establishment of a blockade which is, if defined by the terms of the order in council, to include all the coasts and ports of Germany and every port of possible access to enemy territory. But the novel and quite unprecedented feature of that blockade, if we are to assume it to be properly so defined, is that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts, bars access to them and subjects all neutral ships seeking to approach them to the same suspicion that would attach to them were they bound for the ports of the enemies of Great Britain, and to unusual risks and penalties.

It is manifest that such limitations, risks and liabilities placed upon the ships of a neutral power on the high seas, beyond the right of visit and search and the right to prevent the shipment of contraband already referred to, are a distinct invasion of the sovereign rights of the nation whose ships, trade or commerce is interfered with.

The government of the United States is, of course, not oblivious to the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated. It might be ready to admit that the old form of "close" blockade with its cordon of ships in the immediate offing of the blockaded ports is no longer practicable in face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines and aircraft, but it can hardly be maintained that, whatever form of effective blockade may be made use of, it is impossible to conform at least to the spirit and principles of the established rules of war. If the necessities of the case should seem to render it imperative that the cordon of blockading vessels be extended across the approaches to any neighboring neutral port or country, it would seem clear that it would still be easily practicable to comply with the well recognized and reasonable prohibition of international law against the blockading of neutral ports by according free admission and exit to all lawful traffic with neutral ports through the blockading cordon. This traffic would, of course, include all outward bound traffic from the neutral country and all inward bound traffic to the neutral country except contraband in transit to the enemy. Such procedure need not conflict in any respect with the rights of the belligerent maintaining the blockade, since the right would remain with the blockading vessels to visit and search all ships either entering or leaving the neutral territory which they were in fact but not of right visiting.

The government of the United States notes that in the order in council his majesty's government give as their reason for entering upon a course of action which they are aware is without precedent in modern warfare the necessity they conceive themselves to have been placed under to retaliate upon their enemies for measures of a similar nature which the latter have announced it their intention to adopt and which they have to some extent adopted; but the government of the United States, recalling the principles upon which his majesty's government have hitherto been scrupulous to act, interprets this as merely a reason for certain extraordinary activities on the part of his majesty's naval forces and not as an excuse for or prelude to any unlawful action. If the course pursued by the present enemies of Great Britain should prove to be in fact tainted by illegality and disregard of the principles of war sanctioned by enlightened nations, it cannot be supposed, and this government does not for a moment suppose, that his majesty's government would wish the same taint to attach to their own actions or would cite such illegal acts as in any sense or degree a justification for similar practices on their part in so far as they affect neutral rights.

It is thus that the government of the United States interprets the language of the note of his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the copy of the order in council which was handed to the ambassador of the United States near the government in London and by him transmitted to Washington.

This government notes with gratification that "wide discretion is afforded to the prize court in dealing with the trade of neutrals in such manner as may in the circumstances be deemed just, and that full provision is made to facilitate claims by persons interested in any goods placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under the order"; that "the effect of the order in council is to confer certain powers upon the executive officers of his majesty's government," and that "the extent to which these powers will be actually exercised and the degree of severity with which the measures of blockade authorized will be put into operation are matters which will depend on the administrative orders issued by the government and the decisions of the authorities especially charged with the duty of dealing with individual ships and cargoes according to the merits of each case." This government further notes with equal satisfaction the declaration of the British government that "the instructions to be issued by his majesty's government to the fleet and to the customs officials and executive committees concerned will impress upon them the duty of acting with the utmost dispatch consistent with the object in view and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as may be compatible with that object, which is, succinctly stated, to establish a blockade to prevent vessels from carrying goods for or coming from Germany."

In view of these assurances formally given to this government, it is confidently expected that the extensive powers conferred by the order in council on the executive officers of the crown will be restricted by "orders issued by the government" directing the exercise of their discretionary powers in such a manner as to modify in practical application those provisions of the order in council which, if strictly enforced, would violate neutral rights and interrupt legitimate trade. Relying on the faithful performance of these voluntary assurances by his majesty's government, the United States takes it for granted that the approach of American merchantmen to neutral ports situated upon the long line of coast affected by the order in council will not be interfered with when it is known that they do not carry goods which are contraband of war or goods destined to or proceeding from ports within the belligerent territory affected.

The government of the United States assumes with the greater confidence that his majesty's government will thus adjust their practice to the recognized rules of international law, because it is manifest that the British government have adopted an extraordinary method of "stopping cargoes destined for or coming from the enemy's territory," which, owing to the existence of unusual conditions in modern warfare at sea, it will be difficult to restrict to the limits which have been heretofore required by the law of nations. Though the area of operations is confined to "European waters, including the Mediterranean," so great an area of the high seas is covered and the cordon of ships is so distant from the territory affected that neutral vessels must necessarily pass through the blockading force in order to reach important neutral ports which Great Britain as a belligerent has not the legal right to blockade, and which, therefore, it is presumed she has no intention of claiming to blockade. The Scandinavian and Danish ports, for example, are open to American trade. They are also free so far as the actual enforcement of the order in council is concerned, to carry on trade with German Baltic ports, although it is an essential element of blockade that it bear with equal severity upon all neutrals.

This government, therefore, infers that the commanders of his majesty's ships of war engaged in maintaining the so-called blockade will be instructed to avoid an enforcement of the proposed measures of nonintercourse in such a way as to impose restrictions upon neutral trade more burdensome than those which have been regarded as inevitable when the ports of a belligerent are actually blockaded by the ships of its enemy.

The possibilities of serious interruption of American trade under the order in council are so many and the methods proposed are so unusual and seem liable to constitute so great an impediment and embarrassment to neutral commerce that the government of the United States, if the order in council is strictly enforced, apprehends many interferences with its legitimate trade which will impose upon his majesty's government heavy responsibilities for acts of the British authorities clearly subversive of the rights of neutral nations on the high seas. It is therefore expected that his majesty's government, having considered these possibilities, will take the steps necessary to avoid them, and, in the event that they should unhappily occur, will be prepared to make full reparation for every act which under the rules of international law constitutes a violation of neutral rights.

As stated in its communication of Oct. 22, 1914, "this government will insist that the rights and duties of the United States and its citizens in the present war be defined by the existing rules of international law and the treaties of the United States, irrespective of the provisions of the declaration of London, and that this government reserves to itself the right to enter a protest or demand in each case in which those rights and duties so defined are violated or their free exercise interfered with by the authorities of the British government."

In conclusion you will reiterate to his majesty's government that this statement of the views of the government of the United States is made in the most friendly spirit, and in accordance with the uniform candor which has characterized the relations of the two governments in the past, and which has been in large measure the foundation of the peace and amity existing between the two nations without interruption for a century.

CONSUL GENERAL SKINNER TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Consulate General, London, April 7, 1915.

(Extract.)

Sir: Referring to my telegram dated March 31st setting forth that under an unproclaimed order in council dated March 23d it was proposed to requisition the cargo of the Wilhelmina. I have the honor to inclose herewith a full copy of the order in question.

I have, etc., ROBERT P. SKINNER.

Order in Council.

March 23, 1915.

Whereas by section 3 of the prize courts act, 1894, his majesty in council is authorized to make rules of court for regulating, subject to the provisions of the naval prize act, 1864, and the said act, the procedure and practice of prize courts within the meaning of the naval prize act, 1864, and the duties and conduct of the officers of the courts and of the practitioners therein, and for regulating the fees to be taken by the officers thereof, and the costs, charges and expenses to be allowed to the practitioners therein;

And whereas, in pursuance of the prize courts act, 1894, certain rules were made by the order of his majesty in council, dated the 5th day of August, 1914, and amended by the orders of his majesty in council of the 30th day of September, 1914, and the 28th day of November, 1914, respectively, which said rules and amended rules were by the said orders in council directed to take effect provisionally in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the rules publication act, 1893, from the dates of the said orders in council, respectively;

And whereas, the provisions of section 1 of the rules publication act, 1893, were duly complied with in respect of the said rules and amended rules, and the same were finally made by the orders of his majesty in council, dated respectively the 17th day of September, 1914, the 28th day of November, 1914, and the 3d day of February, 1915;

And whereas, it is expedient that the said rules and amended rules should be further amended;

And whereas, on account of urgency this order should come into immediate operation;

Now, therefore, his majesty, by virtue of the powers in this behalf by the said act or otherwise in him vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:

1. That in Order IX. (discovery, inspection and admission of documents and facts) of the said rules:

In rule 1, the words "upon filing an affidavit" shall be omitted.

In rule 1, instead of the words "any other party" there shall be substituted the words "any party other than the proper officer of the crown."

2. That in Order XI (sale, appraisement, safe custody and inspection of prize) of the said rules, in rule 1, the following words shall be omitted: "on account of the condition of a ship, or an application of a claimant, and on or after condemnation."

3. That in Order XV. (evidence and hearing) of the said rules, the following rule shall be added:

"21. Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules the proper officer of the crown may apply to the judge for leave to administer interrogatories for the examination of any person whether a party to the cause or not."

4. That Order XXIX. (requisition by admiralty) of the said rules, as amended by his majesty's order in council dated the 28th day of November, 1914, shall be, and the same is hereby, revoked, and in lieu thereof the following order shall have effect:

"Order XXIX.—Requisition.

"1. Where it is made to appear to the judge on the application of the proper officer of the crown that it is desired to requisition on behalf of his majesty a ship in respect of which no final decree of condemnation has been made, he shall order that the ship shall be appraised, and that upon an undertaking being given in accordance with rule 5 of this order, the ship shall be released and delivered to the crown.

"2. Where a decree for the detention of a ship has been made in accordance with Order XXVIII. the proper officer of the crown may file a notice (Appendix A, Form No. 55) that the crown desires to requisition the same, and thereupon a commission (Appendix A, Form No. 56) to the marshal directing him to appraise the ship shall issue. Upon an undertaking being given in accordance with rule 5 of this order the ship shall be released and delivered to the crown. Service of this notice shall not be required before filing, but copies thereof shall be served upon the parties by the proper officer of the crown as soon thereafter as possible.

"3. Where in any case of requisition under this order it is made to appear to the judge on behalf of the crown that the ship is required for the service of his majesty forthwith, the judge may order the same to be forthwith released and delivered to the crown without appraisal.

"4. In any case where a ship has been requisitioned under the provisions of this order and whether or not an appraisal has been made, the court may, on the application of any party, fix the amount to be paid by the crown in respect of the value of the ship.

"5. In every case of requisition under this order an undertaking in writing shall be filed by the proper officer of the crown for payment into court on behalf of the crown of the appraised value of the ship, or of the amount fixed under rule 4 of this order, as the case may be, at such time or times as the court shall declare by order that the same or any part thereof is required for the purpose of payment out of court.

"6. Where in any case of requisition under this order it is made to appear to the judge on behalf of the crown that the crown desires to requisition the ship temporarily the court may, in lieu of an order of release, make an order for the temporary delivery of the ship to the crown, and subject as aforesaid the provisions of this order shall apply to such a requisition; provided, that in the event of the return of the ship to the custody of the court, the court may make such order as it thinks fit for the release of the undertaking given on behalf of the crown or the reduction of the amount undertaken to be paid thereby, as the case may be; and provided also, that where the ship so requisitioned is subject to the provisions of Order XXVIII., rule 1, relating to detention, the amount for which the crown shall be considered liable in respect of such requisition shall be the amount of the damage, if any, which the ship has suffered by reason of such temporary delivery as aforesaid.

"7. The proceedings in respect of a ship requisitioned under this order shall continue notwithstanding the requisition.

"8. In any case of requisition of a ship in respect of which no cause has been instituted, any person interested in such ship may, without issuing a writ, provided he does not intend to make a claim for restitution or damages, apply by summons for an order that the amount to be paid in respect of such ship be fixed by the court, and the judge may, on the hearing of such summons, order the ship to be appraised or to be valued, or give such other directions for fixing the amount as he may think fit."

5. That in Form 4 in Appendix A to the said rules there shall be omitted the words "commander of our ship of war" and the words "taken and seized as prize by our said ship of war."

6. This order shall take effect provisionally in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the rules publication act, 1893, from the date hereof.

ALMERIC FITZROY.

THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT LONDON TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE AT INTERIM.

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, June 22, 1915.

Lord Creve, in charge of foreign office during Sir Edward Grey's temporary absence, has just handed me a printed memorandum dated June 17. It is not an answer to the principles set forth in the note transmitted in your 1343 of March 30, but merely an explanation of concrete cases and the regulations under which they are dealt with. Foreign office wishes to arrange for simultaneous publication here and in Washington morning of 25th inst. Please telegraph if this date is satisfactory. Memorandum reads as follows:

"1. His majesty's government have on various occasions, and notably in the communication which was addressed to the United States ambassador on the 15th of March last, given assurances to the United States government that they would make it their first aim to minimize the inconvenience which must inevitably be caused to neutral commerce from the existence of a state of war at sea, and in particular from the measures taken by the allied governments for the restriction of the enemies' overseas trade. In view of the representation and complaints made to this department by the ambassador from time to time as to the peculiar hardships alleged to have been wrongly inflicted on American trade and shipping by the operation of those measures, his majesty's government desire to offer the following observations respecting the manner in which they have consistently endeavored to give practical effect to those assurances.

"2. It will be recalled that, at the moment when his majesty's government announced their measures against enemy commerce, they declared their intention to refrain altogether from the exercise of the right to confiscate ships or cargoes, which belligerents had always previously claimed in respect of breaches of blockade; that, under article five (1) of the enactment of the 11th March, it was expressly provided that any person claiming to be interested in goods placed in the prize court in pursuance of the provision of that enactment, might forthwith issue a writ against the proper officer of the crown, the object being to confer upon claimants the right to institute proceedings without waiting for the writ of the procurator-general, and thus to remove all possible cause of legitimate grievance on account of delay; and that, finally, a pacific assurance was given to the United States government that the instructions to be issued by his majesty's government to the fleet, and to the customs officials and executive officials concerned, would impress upon them the duty of acting with the utmost dispatch consistent with the object in view, and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as might be compatible with that object, namely, to prevent vessels carrying goods for, or coming from, the enemy's territory.

"3. The above measures were all designed to alleviate the burdens imposed upon neutral seaborne commerce in general. Various special concessions, over and above those enumerated, have moreover been made in favour of United States citizens.

"4. Thus his majesty's government have acted, as regards shipments of American cotton, in accordance with the provisions of an arrangement arrived at in direct collaboration with representatives of the American cotton interests. In accepting this scheme the principal representative of those interests described it as conceding all that American interest could properly ask. The provisions of the arrangement were, as the United States ambassador is aware, as follows:

"(1) All cotton for which contracts of sale and freight engagements have already been made before the 2d March is to be allowed free (or bought at contract price if stopped), provided the ship sails not later than the 31st March.

"(2) Similar treatment is to be accorded to all cotton insured before the 2d March, provided it is put on board not later than the 16th March.

"(3) All shipments of cotton claiming the above protection are to be declared before sailing, and documents produced to, and certificates obtained from, consular officers or other authority fixed by the government."

"5. Considerable shipments of cotton have already been dealt with under this arrangement, and in certain cases the dates specified have been extended in favor of American shippers. The board of trade have already paid a sum exceeding £450,000 to various American claimants, and all claims are being and will continue to be paid as rapidly as they are presented and the proofs of title can be checked. If in some cases progress has been delayed, this has been due to the fact—which has seriously embarrassed his majesty's government—that a number of consignments, for which the American shippers had specifically invoked the protection of the arrangement, are now claimed by Swedish and Dutch firms, whose title to ownership, notwithstanding the action of the American shippers, appears in some cases to be valid, and in others has led to the issue of writs in the prize court.

"6. It has been explicitly acknowledged by the special representatives of the American claimants, who have been in constant and direct communication with the board of trade, that all the claims so far submitted under the cotton arrangement have been settled with the utmost promptitude so soon as the production of the necessary documents of the claimants allowed of this being done. There is, at the present moment, no claim before his majesty's government that has not been paid, and the sums so paid over are already considerably in excess of the amounts realized by the sale of the goods.

"7. As regards the more general allegation of delay in dealing with cases of detained cargoes, the following facts and figures may be quoted:

"The total number of vessels which, having cleared from United States ports since the initial tion of the retaliatory measures against German trade, are still detained in united kingdom ports, is twenty-seven; of this number, eight are discharging cotton which his majesty's government have agreed to purchase under the above arrangement; of the remaining nineteen vessels, seven are free to depart so soon as the items of their cargo placed in the prize court have been discharged. The other twelve, of which three only are American ships, are detained pending inquiries as to suspicious consignments, and particulars as to the dates and approximate causes of detention are furnished in the accompanying list: It will be observed that eight have been detained for a period of less than a week, and three for a period of less than a fortnight, while the detention of one is due to the difficulties in regard to transit across Sweden and Russia."

"8. His majesty's government remain convinced that, on an impartial review of the facts, it will be admitted that no arbitrary interference with American interests has, in regard to cotton cargoes, occurred; while if due regard be paid to the enormous volume of American and neutral shipping which is continually engaged in the transatlantic trade, the figures and dates quoted in the preceding paragraph will emphasize the restricted nature of any interference which has taken place and the close attention with which the officials concerned have adhered to their instructions to act in all cases with expedition and with every possible consideration for neutrals."

"9. Since his majesty's government have been compelled to adopt their present measures against German commerce, they have given special consideration to the question of avoiding as far as possible unnecessary damage to the interests of neutrals in regard to the export of goods of German origin, and here again liberal concessions have been made to United States citizens. Under the rules enacted on the 11th March provision is made for the investigation of all neutral claims respecting such goods in the prize court, and it is obvious that these claims can receive due and equitable consideration most properly before a judicial tribunal. Nevertheless, in deference to the express desire of the United States government, arrangements were made toward the end of March whereby United States citizens who might desire to import goods of German origin via a neutral port were enabled to produce proof of payment to his majesty's embassy at Washington. If such proof were deemed satisfactory, his majesty's government gave an undertaking that the goods concerned should not be interfered with in transit, and the American importer was freed from the necessity of submitting his claim to the prize court in London for adjudication. A few days later his majesty's government further agreed to recognize the neutral ownership of goods of enemy origin even if not paid for before the 1st March, provided they were the subject of an f. o. b. contract of earlier date and had arrived at a neutral port before the 15th March."

"10. Special treatment has also been accorded to cargoes of particular products destined for the United States and stated to be indispensable for the industries of the country, and, in notes addressed to the United States ambassador in April and May, undertakings were given not to interfere during transit with certain cargoes of dyestuffs, potash and German beet seed."

"11. When it became apparent that large quantities of enemy goods were still passing out through neutral countries, his majesty's government felt it necessary to fix a definite date after which such shipments must cease to enjoy the special immunity, theretofore granted, from liability to being placed in the prize court. It had been observed that a large increase had taken place in the number of vessels sailing from neutral countries to America and one of the principal lines of steamships advertised a daily in place of a weekly service. In such circumstances it appeared scarcely possible that goods of enemy origin bought and paid for prior to the 1st March should not have already been shipped to their destination. First June was accordingly fixed as the date after which the privilege allowed in the case of such shipments should cease; but once more a special favor was granted extending the date in exceptional cases to the 15th June."

"12. Importers in the United States having now had three months in which to clear off their purchases in enemy territory, his majesty's government trust that, in presence of the circumstances enumerated, the United States government will acknowledge the great consideration which has been shown to American interests."

"13. Nevertheless a fresh appeal has now been made to his majesty's government that shipments of American owned goods of enemy origin, if paid for before the beginning of March, should be allowed to be shipped without molestation after the 15th June. The appeal is based principally upon the contentions (A) that insufficient time has already elapsed; (B) that no mention of a time limit is made in the enactment of the 11th March; (C) that the proofs of ownership required by his majesty's government are of an exacting nature and involve much time for preparation."

"14. The first contention (A) has already been dealt with. As regards (B) and (C), it is true that the enactment of the 11th March contains no mention of a time limit. But it seems to be overlooked that the time limit had been fixed only for the special immunity granted as an exception from that enactment. It was as a friendly concession to American interests that his majesty's government agreed to an investigation of claims outside the prize court. As for the exacting nature of the proofs required by his majesty's government, experience has shown that such proofs were necessary."

"15. In deference, however, to the renewed representations of the United States ambassador, his majesty's government have given further directions that in all such cases, as may have been specially submitted through the British embassy at Washington or to his majesty's government direct on or before the 15th June and passed, the goods shall be allowed to proceed without interference if shipped from a neutral port on the conditions already laid down, notwithstanding the fact that shipment may not have been made before the 15th June."

"16. His majesty's government will also be prepared hereafter to give special consideration to cases presented to them and involving particular hardships, if the goods concerned are required for neutral governments or municipalities, or in respect of works of public utility, and where payment can be shown to have been made before the 1st March, 1915."

"17. With the above exceptions, his majesty's government regret they cannot continue to deal through the diplomatic channel with individual cases, but they would again point out that special provision is made for the consideration of such cases in the prize court."

"18. Complaints have not infrequently been made that undue delay occurs in dealing with American cargoes in the prize court. An interesting comment on this subject was made by the president of the prize court in the case of the cargo ex-steamship Ogechee on the 14th instant. His lordship, according to the transcript from the official shorthand writer's notes, made the following observations:

"It is a very extraordinary thing that, when the crown are ready to go on, the claimants come here and say, 'We cannot proceed for six weeks.' Some day, toward the end of last term, I had a row of eminent counsel in front pressing me to fix a case at once. I fixed it very nearly at once—that is to say, the second day of the following term. They all came and said: 'We want an adjournment for six weeks.'"

"19. The solicitor-general hereupon remarked: 'If I might say so on that one of the reasons I applied to-day on behalf of the crown that the matter should be dealt with as soon as possible is for that very reason. There has been such a strong desire on the part of America and American citizens that there should be no delay, but one finds, in fact, the delay comes from there."

"20. The president then stated:

"I know that. I do not know what the explanation is, but I am anxious that there should be no delay."

"21. It is true that a number of cases, principally relating to cargoes which, though ostensibly consigned to a person in a neutral country, are in reality believed to be destined for the enemy, have been pending in the prize court for some time. The United States government are aware that most of these cargoes consist of meat and lard, and that much of the delay in bringing these cargoes to adjudication was due to the fact that negotiations were being carried on for many weeks with a representative of the principal American meat packers, for an amicable settlement out of court. When at length, owing to the failure of the negotiations, his majesty's government decided that they would continue the prize court proceedings, and had at the request of the claimants fixed the earliest possible date for the hearing, counsel for the latter asked for an adjournment in their interests despite the fact that the crown was, by his own admission, ready to proceed."

"22. His majesty's government are earnestly desirous of removing all causes of avoidable delay in dealing with American cargoes and vessels which may be detained, and any specific inquiries or representations which may be made by the United States government in regard to particular cases will always receive the most careful consideration and all information which can be afforded without prejudice to prize court proceedings will be readily communicated; but they can scarcely admit that on the basis of actual facts any substantial grievance on the part of American citizens is justified or can be sustained, and they therefore confidently appeal to the opinion of the United States government as enlightened by this memorandum."

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, July 14, 1915.

In view of the differences which are understood to exist between the two governments as to the principles of law applicable in prize court proceedings in cases involving American interests, and in order to avoid any misunderstanding as to the attitude of the United States in regard to such proceedings, you are instructed to inform the British government that in so far as the interests of American citizens are concerned the government of the United States will insist upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law as hitherto established governing neutral trade in time of war, without limitation or impairment by orders in council or other municipal legislation by the British government, and will not recognize the validity of prize court proceedings taken under restraints imposed by British municipal law in derogation of the rights of American citizens under international law.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

Department of State, Washington, July 15, 1915.

Ambassador Page is informed that it has been brought to the attention of the department that the steamship Neches of American register, sailing from Rotterdam for the United States, carrying a general cargo, after being detained at the Downs, was brought to London, where it was required by the British authorities to discharge cargo, the property of American citizens.

It appears that the ground advanced to sustain this action is that the goods originated, in part at least, in Belgium, and fall, therefore, within the provisions of paragraph 4 of the order in council of March 11, which stipulates that every merchant vessel sailing from a port other than a German port, carrying goods of enemy origin, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port.

Ambassador Page is instructed in this case to reiterate the position of the government of the United States as set forth in the department's instruction of March 20, 1915, with respect to the order in council mentioned, the international invalidity of which the government of the United States regards as plainly illustrated by the present instance of the seizure of American owned goods passing from the neutral port of Rotterdam to a neutral port of the United States merely because the goods came originally from territory in the possession of an enemy of Great Britain.

Mr. Page is also instructed to inform the foreign office that the legality of this seizure cannot be admitted and that in the view of the government of the United States it violates the right of the citizens of one neutral to trade with those of another, as well as with those of belligerents except in contraband or in violation of a legal blockade of an enemy seaport, and that the rights of American owners of goods to bring them out of Holland, in due course, in neutral ships must be insisted upon by the United States, even though such goods may have come originally from the territories of enemies of Great Britain. He is directed further to insist upon the desire of this government that goods taken from the Neches, which are the property of American citizens, should be expeditiously released to be forwarded to their destination, and to request that he be advised of the British government's intended course in this matter at the earliest moment convenient to that government.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, July 24, 1915.

Following note, dated July 23, received from Sir Edward Grey this morning:

"On the 2d April your excellency handed to me a copy of a communication containing the criticisms of the United States government on the measures we have been constrained to take on account of the menace to peaceful commerce resulting from the German submarine policy. This communication has received the most careful consideration of his majesty's government."

"2. I fully appreciate the friendly spirit and the candor which are shown in the communication, and, replying in the same spirit, I trust that I may be able to convince your excellency and also the administration at Washington that the measures we have announced are not only reasonable and necessary in themselves, but constitute no more than an adaptation of the old principles of blockade to the peculiar circumstances with which we are confronted."

"3. I need scarcely dwell on the obligation incumbent upon the allies to take every step in their power to overcome their common enemy in view of the shocking violation of the recognized rules and principles of civilized warfare of which he has been guilty during the present struggle. Your excellency's attention has already been drawn to some of these proceedings in the memorandum which I handed to you on the 19th February. Since that time Lord Bryce's report, based on evidence carefully sifted by legal experts, describing the atrocities committed in Belgium, the poisoning of wells in German Southwest Africa, the use of poisonous gases against the troops in Flanders, and, finally, the sinking of the Lusitania without any opportunity to passengers and noncombatants to save their lives, have shown how indispensable it is that we should leave unused no justifiable method of defending ourselves."

"4. Your excellency will remember that in my notes of the 13th and 15th March I explained that the allied governments intended to meet the German attempt to stop all supplies of every kind from leaving or entering British or French ports by themselves intercepting goods going to or from Germany. I read the communication from your excellency's government not as questioning the necessity for our taking all the steps open to us to cripple the enemy's trade, but as directed solely to the question of the legitimacy of the particular measures adopted.

"5. In the various notes which I have received from your excellency the right of a belligerent to establish a blockade of the enemy ports is admitted, a right which has obviously no value save in so far as it gives power to a belligerent to cut off the sea-borne exports and imports of his enemy. The contention which I understand the United States government now put forward is that if a belligerent is so circumstanced that his commerce can pass through adjacent neutral ports as easily as through ports in his own territory his opponent has no right to interfere and must restrict his measures of blockade in such a manner as to leave such avenues of commerce still open to his adversary. This is a contention which his majesty's government feel unable to accept and which seems to them unsustainable either in point of law or upon principles of international equity. They are unable to admit that a belligerent violates any fundamental principle of international law by applying a blockade in such a way as to cut off the enemy's commerce with foreign countries through neutral ports if the circumstances render such an application of the principles of blockade the only means of making it effective. The government of the United States, indeed, intimates its readiness to take into account 'the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated,' and recognizes that 'the form of close blockade with its cordon of ships in the immediate offing of the blockaded ports is no longer practicable in the face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines and air craft.'

"6. The only question, then, which can arise in regard to the measures resorted to for the purpose of carrying out a blockade upon these extended lines is whether, to use your excellency's words, they 'conform to the spirit and principles of the essence of the rules of war,' and we shall be content to apply this test to the action which we have taken in so far as it has necessitated interference with neutral commerce.

"7. It may be noted in this connection that at the time of the civil war the United States found themselves under the necessity of declaring a blockade of some 3,000 miles of coast line, a military operation for which the number of vessels available was at first very small. It was vital to the cause of the United States in that great struggle that they should be able to cut off the trade of the southern states. The confederate armies were dependent on supplies from over seas, and these supplies could not be obtained without exporting the cotton wherewith to pay for them. To cut off this trade the United States could only rely upon a blockade. The difficulties confronting the federal government were in part due to the fact that neighboring neutral territory afforded convenient centers from which contraband could be introduced into the territory of their enemies and from which blockade running could be facilitated. Your excellency will no doubt remember how, in order to meet this new difficulty, the old principles relating to contraband and blockade were developed and the doctrine of continuous voyage was applied and enforced under which goods destined for the enemy territory were intercepted before they reached the neutral ports from which they were to be re-exported.

"8. The difficulties which imposed upon the United States the necessity of reshaping some of the old rules are somewhat akin to those with which the allies are now faced in dealing with the trade of their enemy. Adjacent to Germany are various neutral countries which afford her convenient opportunities for carrying on her trade with foreign countries. Her own territories are covered by a network of railways and waterways which enable her commerce to pass as conveniently through ports in such neutral countries as through her own. A blockade limited to enemy ports would leave open routes by which every kind of German commerce could pass almost as easily as through the ports in her own territory. Rotterdam is indeed the nearest outlet for some of the industrial districts of Germany.

"9. As a counterpoise to the freedom with which one belligerent may send his commerce across a neutral country without compromising its neutrality, the other belligerent may fairly claim to intercept such commerce before it has reached, or after it has left, the neutral state, provided, of course, that he can establish that the commerce with which he interferes is the commerce of his enemy and not commerce which is bona fide destined for or proceeding from the neutral state. It seems, accordingly, that if it be recognized that a blockade is in certain cases the appropriate method of intercepting the trade of an enemy country, and if the blockade can only become effective by extending it to enemy commerce passing through neutral ports, such an extension is defensible and in accordance with principles which have met with general acceptance.

"10. To the contention that such action is not directly supported by written authority it may be replied that it is the business of writers on international law to formulate existing rules rather than to offer suggestions for their adaptation to altered circumstances, and your excellency will remember the unmeasured terms in which a group of prominent international lawyers of all nations condemned the doctrine which had been laid down by the Supreme court of the United States in the case of the Springbok, a doctrine upheld by the claims commission at Washington in 1873. But the United States and the British governments took a broader view and looked below the surface at the underlying principles and the government of this country, whose nationals were the sufferers by the extension and development of the old methods of blockade made by the United States during the civil war, abstained from all protests against the decisions by which the ships and their cargoes were condemned.

"11. What is really important in the general interest is that adaptations of the old rules should not be made unless they are consistent with the general principles upon which an admitted belligerent right is based. It is also essential that all unnecessary injury to neutrals should be avoided. With these conditions it may be safely affirmed that the steps we are taking to intercept commodities on their way to and from Germany fully comply. We are interfering with no goods with which we should not be entitled to interfere by blockade if the geographical position and the conditions of Germany at present were such that her commerce passed through her own ports. We are taking the utmost possible care not to interfere with commerce genuinely destined for or proceeding from neutral countries. Furthermore, we have tempered the severity with which our measures might press upon neutrals by not applying the rule which was invariable in the old form of blockade—that ships and goods on their way to or from blockaded area are liable to condemnation.

"12. The communication made by the United States embassy on the 2d April describes as a novel and quite unprecedented feature of the blockade that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts and has the effect of barring access to them. It does not appear that our measures can be properly so described. If we are successful in the efforts we are making to distinguish between the commerce of neutral and enemy countries there will be no substantial interference with the trade of neutral ports except in so far as they constitute ports of access to and exit from the enemy territory. There are at this moment many neutral ports which it would be mere affectation to regard as offering facilities only for the commerce of the neutral country in which they are situated, and the only commerce with which we propose to interfere is that of the enemy who seeks to make use of such ports for the purposes of transit to or from his own country.

"13. One of the earlier passages in your excellency's memorandum was to the effect that the sovereignty of neutral nations in time of war suffers no diminution except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations has limited it 'by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights,' which it is considered may be exercised by nations at war; and these it defines as the right to capture and condemnation for unneutral service, for the carriage of contraband and for breach of blockade. I may, however, be permitted to point out that the practice of nations on each of the three subjects mentioned has not at any time been uniform or clearly determined, nor has the practice of any maritime nation always been consistent.

"14. There are various particulars in which the exact method of carrying a blockade into effect has from time to time varied. The need of a public notification, the requisite standard of effectiveness, the locality of the blockading squadrons, the right of the individual ship to a preliminary warning that the blockade is in force and the penalty to be inflicted on a captured blockade runner are all subjects on which different views have prevailed in different countries and in which the practice of particular countries has been altered from time to time. The one principle which is fundamental and has obtained universal recognition is that by means of blockade a belligerent is entitled to cut off by effective means the sea-borne commerce of his enemy.

"15. It is the same with contraband. The underlying principle is well established, but as to the details there has been a wide variety of view. As for unneutral service—the very term is of such recent introduction that many writers of repute on international law do not even mention it. It is impossible in the view of his majesty's government in these circumstances to maintain that the right of a belligerent to intercept the commerce of his enemy is limited in a way suggested in your excellency's communication.

"16. There are certain subsidiary matters dealt with in your excellency's communication to which I think it well to refer. Amongst these may be mentioned your citation of the declaration of Paris, due no doubt to the words which occur in the memorandum sent by me to your excellency on the 1st March, wherein it was stated that the allied governments would hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership or origin and to our announcement that vessels might be required to discharge goods of enemy ownership as well as those of enemy origin or destination.

"17. It is not necessary to discuss the extent to which the second rule of the declaration of Paris is affected by these measures or whether it could be held to apply at all as between Great Britain and the United States. In actual practice, however, we are not detaining goods on the sole ground that they are the property of an enemy. The purpose of the measures we are taking is to intercept commerce on its way from and to the enemy country. There are many cases in which proof that the goods were enemy property would afford strong evidence that they were of enemy origin or enemy destination, and it is only in such cases that we are detaining them. Where proof of enemy ownership would afford no evidence of such origin or destination we are not in practice detaining the goods.

"18. His majesty's government have been gratified to observe that the measures which they are enforcing have had no detrimental effect on the commerce of the United States. Figures of recent months show that the increased opportunities afforded by the war for American commerce have more than compensated for the loss of the German and Austrian markets.

"19. I trust that in the light of the above explanations it will be realized that the measures to which we have resorted have been not only justified by the exigencies of the case, but can be defended as in accordance with general principles which have commended themselves to the governments of both countries. I am glad to be able to assure your excellency that we shall continue to apply these measures with every desire to occasion the least possible amount of inconvenience to persons engaged in legitimate commerce.

"I have, etc.,

H. GREY."

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, July 31, 1915.

Your 1852, 15th.

Sir Edward Grey has to-day sent me the following note:

"The note which your excellency addressed to me on the 17th instant respecting the detention of the cargo of the steamship Neches has, I need hardly say, received the careful attention of his majesty's government.

"The note which I had the honor to send to your excellency on the 23d instant has already explained the view of his majesty's government on the legal aspect of the question, though it was prepared before your excellency's communication of the 17th had been received, and pending consideration by the government of the United States of the views and arguments set forth in the British note of the 25d it is unnecessary for me to say more on the question of right or of law.

"There is, however, one general observation that seems relevant to the note from your excellency respecting the cargo of the Neches.

"It is the practice of the German government in the waters through which the Neches was passing to sink neutral as well as British merchant vessels irrespective of the destination of the vessel or origin of the cargo, and without proper regard or provision for the safety of passengers or crews, many of whom have lost their lives in consequence. There can be no question that this action is contrary to the recognized and settled rules of international law as well as to the principles of humanity.

"His majesty's government, on the other hand, have adhered to the rules of visit and search, and have observed the obligation to bring into port and submit to a prize court any ships or cargoes with regard to which they think they have a good case for detention or for condemnation as contraband.

"His majesty's government are not aware, except from the published correspondence between the United States and Germany, to what extent reparation has been claimed from Germany by neutrals for loss of ships, lives and cargoes, nor how far these acts have been the subject even of protest by the neutral governments concerned.

"While these acts of the German government continue it seems neither reasonable nor just that his majesty's government should be pressed to abandon the rights claimed in the British note of the 23d, and to allow goods from Germany to pass freely through waters effectively patrolled by British ships of war.

"If, however, it be alleged that in particular cases and special circumstances hardship may be inflicted on citizens of neutral countries, his majesty's government are ready in such cases to examine the facts in a spirit of consideration for the interest of neutrals, and in this spirit they are prepared to deal with the cargo of the Neches, to which your excellency has called attention, if it is held that the particular circumstances of this case fall within this category."

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

No. 2575. (Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, July 31, 1915.

Your 1848, July 14, 5 p. m. I have to-day received the following note from Sir Edward Grey:

"Foreign Office, July 31, 1915.

"Your Excellency:

"1. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note dated the 16th instant in which you were good enough to communicate to me, for the information of his majesty's government, the opinion held by the government of the United States, that in view of differences which they understand to exist between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the prize court, they could not recognize the validity of proceedings taken in his majesty's prize court in derogation of the rights of citizens of the United States.

"2. I do not understand to what divergence of views as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the prize court the government of the United States refer, for I am not aware of any differences existing between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before such courts.

"3. British prize courts 'according to the ancient form of commission under which they sit, are to determine cases which come before them according to the course of admiralty and the law of nations and the statutes, rules and regulations for the time being in force in that behalf.' As to the principles applied by the American prize courts, I note that in the case of the Amy Warwick [2 Sprague, 123] it was held that prize courts are subject to the instructions of their own sovereign. In the absence of such instructions their jurisdiction and rules of decision are to be ascertained by reference to the known powers of such tribunals and the principles by which they are governed under the public law and the practice of nations. It would appear, therefore, that the principles applied by the prize courts of the two countries are identical.

"4. As illustrating further the attitude adopted by the judges of British prize courts toward these two sources of law, the municipal legislation of its sovereign on the one hand and the principles of international law on the other, I should like to refer your excellency to a classical passage in the judgment of Lord Stowell, in the case of the Fox, in which that famous judge observed in the course of the discussion: 'A question has been stated, what would be the duty of the court under orders in council, that were repugnant to the law of nations? It has been contended on one side that the court would at all events be found to enforce the orders in council, on the other that the court would be bound to apply the rule of the law of nations adapted to the particular case, in disregard of the orders in council. This court is bound to administer the law of nations to the subjects of other countries in the different relations in which they may be placed toward this country and its government. That is what others have a right to demand for their subjects and to complain if they receive it not. This is its unwritten law evidenced in the course of its decisions and collected from the common usage of civilized states. At the same time it is strictly true, that by the constitution of this country, the king in council possesses legislative rights over this court and has power to issue orders and instructions which it is bound to obey and enforce; and these constitute the written law of this court. These two propositions, that the court is bound to administer the law of nations and that it is bound to enforce the king's orders in council, are not at all inconsistent with each other, because these orders and instructions are presumed to conform themselves, under the given circumstances, to the principles of its unwritten law. They are either directory applications of those principles to the cases indicated in them—cases which, with all the facts and circumstances belonging to them, and which constitute their legal character, could be but imperfectly known to the court itself; or they are positive regulations, consistent with these principles, applying to matters which require more exact and definite rules than those general principles are capable of furnishing. The constitution of this court, relatively to the legislative power of the king in council, is analogous to that of the courts of common law relatively to that of the parliament of this kingdom. These courts have their unwritten law, the approved reasons, principles of natural reason and justice—they have likewise the written or statute law in acts of parliament, which are directory applications of the same principles to particular subjects or positive regulations consistent with them, upon matters which would remain too much at large if they were left to the imperfect information which the courts could extract from mere general speculations. What would be the duty of the individuals who preside in these courts, if required to enforce an act of parliament which contradicted those principles, is a question which I presume they would not entertain a priori; because they will not entertain, a priori, the supposition that any such will arise. In like manner this court will not let itself loose into speculations as to what would be its duty under such an emergency; because it cannot, without extreme indecency, presume that any such emergency will happen. And it is the less disposed to entertain them, because its own observation and experience attest the general conformity of such orders and instructions to its principles of unwritten law.

"5. The above passage has recently been quoted and adopted by the president of the prize court in the case of the Zamora, in which Sir S. Evans said: 'I make bold to express the hope and belief that the nations of the world need not be apprehensive that orders in council will emanate from the government of this country in such violation of the acknowledged laws of nations that it is conceivable that our prize tribunals, holding the law of nations in reverence, would feel called upon to disregard and refuse obedience to the provisions of such orders.'

"6. In the note which I handed to your excellency on the 23d July I endeavored to convince the government of the United States, and I trust with success, that the measures that we have felt ourselves compelled to adopt, in consequence of the numerous acts committed by our enemies in violation of the laws of war and the dictates of humanity, are consistent with the principles of international law. The legality of these measures has not yet formed the subject of a decision of the prize court; but I wish to take this opportunity of reminding your excellency that it is open to any United States citizen whose claim is before the prize court to contend that any order in council which may affect his claim is inconsistent with the principles of international law and is, therefore, not binding upon the court. If the prize court declines to accept his contentions, and if, after such a decision has been upheld on appeal by the judicial committee of his majesty's privy council, the government of the United States of America consider that there is serious ground for holding that the decision is incorrect and infringes the rights of their citizens, it is open to them to claim that it should be subjected to review by an international tribunal.

"7. This principle that the decisions of the national prize courts may properly be subjected to international review was conceded by Great Britain in Article 7 of the Jay treaty of 1793, and by the United States of America under the treaty of Washington of 1871. Your excellency will no doubt remember that certain cases (collectively known as the 'Matamoros cases') were submitted to the commission established under Articles 12-17 of the treaty of Washington. In each of these cases proceedings in prize court had been instituted in the prize courts of the United States, and in each case the judgment of the Supreme court, the court of last resort, in cases of prize had been obtained, the United States filed a demurrer in these cases, alleging that as they had been heard by the prize courts of the United States of original and appellate jurisdiction, the decision of the appellate court was final and no claim based upon it could be made before the commission. The demurrer was unanimously overruled and the cases heard, and the agent of the United States, in his report of the proceedings of the commission, stated that he personally maintained no doubt of the jurisdiction of the commission as an international tribunal to review the decisions of the prize courts of the United States, where the parties alleging themselves aggrieved had prosecuted their claims by appeals to the court of last resort; as this jurisdiction, however, had been sometimes questioned, he deemed it desirable that a formal adjudication by the commission should be had upon this question."

"8. The same principle was accepted both by the United States government and his majesty's government in 1907 in connection with the proposed establishment of an international prize court, although certain constitutional difficulties have led the United States government to propose that the right of recourse to the international prize court in connection with a decision of the Supreme court of the United States should take the form of a direct claim for compensation."

"9. It is clear, therefore, that both the United States government and his majesty's government have adopted the principle that the decisions of a national prize court may be open to review if it is held in the prize court and in the judicial committee of the privy council on appeal that the orders and instructions issued by his majesty's government in matters relating to prize are in harmony with the principles of international law; and should the government of the United States, unfortunately, feel compelled to maintain a contrary view, his majesty's government will be prepared to concert with the United States government in order to decide upon the best way of applying the above principle to the situation which would then have arisen. I trust, however, that the defense of our action, which I have already communicated to your excellency, and the willingness of his majesty's government (which has been shown in so many instances) to make reasonable concessions to American interests, will prevent the necessity for such action arising."

"10. In any case, I trust that the explanations given above will remove the misapprehension under which I cannot but feel the government of the United States are laboring as to the principles applied by British prize courts in dealing with the cases which come before them."

"I have, etc.,

E. GREY."

BRITISH SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

Foreign Office, Aug. 13, 1915.

Your Excellency: I have the honor to refer to the memorandum which you were good enough to communicate June 3 last, in which you informed me of the desire of the United States consul-general in London to be furnished with figures showing the amount of raw cocoa and preparations of cocoa exported from Great Britain to Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Italy during the four months ended April 30, 1915, as compared with the same period in 1914 and 1913. Your excellency will remember that I had the honor to communicate to you tabular statement of these figures on the 16th ultimo.

His majesty's ambassador at Washington reported July 22 that the acting councillor of the state department had referred in conversation to the unfavorable impression created at Washington by reports as to the increase in British exports to northern European neutral ports since the outbreak of the war received from Consul-General Skinner, these reports having given figures showing increases in the British exports of some commodities to those countries.

I am, therefore, communicating to Sir Cecil Spring-Rice statistics showing what the exports of the united kingdom were in comparison with those of the United States during the first five months of this year, that this impression may be removed as soon as possible; but as I hear that statements, no doubt inspired by German agents, are being circulated in America to the effect that his majesty's government are trying to stop the legitimate trade of the United States with neutral countries in order to capture the trade for the British empire, and are, therefore, allowing goods to be exported from the united kingdom which they have not allowed to be imported into the same countries from the United States, I think it well to inform your excellency immediately of the true state of the case.

With this view, I invite attention to the following data and figures:

The increased re-export of cotton from the united kingdom to Norway, Sweden, Denmark and the Netherlands during the months of January to May, 1915, as compared with the same period in 1914, amounted to 503,995 centals of 100 pounds. The United States exported to the four countries mentioned during this period in 1915 3,353,638 centals, as compared with 204,177 centals during January to May, 1914, an increase of 3,149,461 centals, or six times the increase in the export of cotton from the united kingdom.

The above figures for the united kingdom are taken from the official customs returns; those from the United States have been compiled carefully by the war trade department from the manifests of those vessels which actually arrived with cargo from the United States in Scandinavian and Dutch ports during the five months, February to June, 1915, as compared with the five-twelfths of the total recorded exports from the United States to those countries in the year ended June 30, 1914. It has been necessary to adopt this method, as the monthly summary of foreign commerce, issued by the United States government, gives very few details with regard to American trade with those countries.

It is evident that some shipments must have taken place from the United States to Scandinavia and the Netherlands which could not come within the scope of even the most circumstantial compilation of statistics drawn up from the manifests of examined ships alone, and I would, therefore, lay particular stress upon the fact that the figures thus obtained by the war trade department necessarily are understatements of the amounts actually shipped.

Even from the figures thus obtained it is possible to show conclusively how much greater the increases in the American exports to Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands have been than those of Great Britain during the first five months of this year, not only in the case of cotton, but in that of almost every other important commodity.

Re-exports of rubber from the united kingdom to Scandinavia and the Netherlands declined from 17,726 centals of 100 pounds in January-May, 1914, to 16,693 centals in January-May, 1915; on the other hand, exports of rubber from the United States to the same destinations increased from 1,579 centals to 5,040 centals. Larger re-exports of rubber to the United States from this country have indeed taken place, but all other re-exports of rubber have declined during this period.

It will, therefore, be seen that this country actually has been supplying more rubber to the United States at the expense of other neutrals, while American exporters have taken advantage of this to ship increased quantities of rubber to Scandinavia and the Netherlands.

In the case of lubricating oils, the increase of united kingdom exports to Scandinavia and Holland was 703,370 gallons; the increase of the United States exports during the same five months was 3,857,593 gallons, being five times as great as the British increase.

The increase in the re-exports of unmanufactured tobacco from the united kingdom to the same countries and over the same period was 2,987,244 pounds; the corresponding United States increase was 6,081,848 pounds. The British increase is mainly due to the diversion of tobacco grown in the British dominions from continental to united kingdom ports.

The exports of manufactured tobacco from the united kingdom have actually declined, while exports of this commodity from the United States to Scandinavia and the Netherlands have hitherto been relatively insignificant. It is, therefore, improbable that the United States can have lost trade in tobacco in consequence of the measures taken by his majesty's government.

United kingdom re-exports of cocoa have risen from 2,976,143 pounds in January-May, 1914, to 14,504,013 pounds in January-May, 1915, an increase, in round numbers, of 11,500,000. Exports from the United States for the same months have risen from 12,000 pounds in 1914 to 16,016,000 pounds in 1915, an increase of 16,000,000. These figures speak for themselves.

In the first five months of 1914 the united kingdom re-exports of coffee to the same countries amounted to 80,407 hundredweight, and the exports from the United States to 7,376 hundredweight. In the corresponding five months of 1915 the united kingdom re-exports were 263,488 hundredweight, while the imports from the United States were 285,760 hundredweight, showing that the United States exports, which were formerly much less, are now greater than those of the united kingdom.

In the case of rice, the increased re-export from the united kingdom, which amounted to 193,468 hundredweight for the period under review, was entirely due to the diversion to the united kingdom ports of the large trade in Indian rice formerly carried on through Hamburg and other continental ports: The exports from the United States have increased from 262 hundredweight in January-May, 1914, to 27,800 hundredweight in January-May, 1915, an increase of 27,538 hundredweight.

The united kingdom increase in the export of wheat flour to Scandinavia and the Netherlands during January-May, 1915, compared with 1914, was 47,045 hundredweight; the United States increase was 2,555,593 hundredweight for the same period.

For the same period the united kingdom increase in the export of barley to Scandinavia and the Netherlands was 249,512 hundredweight; the United States increase, 2,016,882 hundredweight.

I could point to many other instances of similar proportionate increases in the exports of the United States to Scandinavia and the Netherlands as compared with exports to the same countries from the united kingdom during the last five months. In respect to the great majority of articles for which figures of United States trade can be given the increases in this trade are greater, and in some cases very considerably greater, than the increases in the united kingdom trade.

In many cases increases in united kingdom re-exports are due to the fact that the products of British India and colonial products which formerly went direct to continental ports, such as Hamburg, Rotterdam or Copenhagen, are now sent to the united kingdom and thence distributed to old customers in Scandinavia and the Netherlands.

Among such may be mentioned pepper, cinnamon and other spices (largely the product of the British East Indies), Indian tea, palm kernels (mainly from British West Africa), and copra (mainly from the Straits Settlements and Australia). The direct trade of the British overseas dominions with the port of Hamburg alone is very great in normal times.

In many instances our re-export trade for the first five months of this year shows a large decline.

Everything in the statistics I have quoted tends to show that the mercantile community of the United States has made profits proportionately equal to or greater than those of the mercantile community of Great Britain in respect to all those demands which have inevitably arisen in Scandinavia and the Netherlands as a consequence of the closing of German ports.

The total volume of the trade of the United States with these countries has increased 300 per cent, as your excellency will see from the accompanying table, taken from the United States official 'Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce,' which shows the comparative value of the total exports of the United States to Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands during the first five months of 1914 and 1915. The value of the total increase in those exports during this period amounted to $145,658,000.

E. GREY.

W. H. PAGE.

Department of State, Washington, Oct. 21, 1915.

Sir: I desire that you present a note to Sir Edward Grey in the sense of the following:

1. The government of the United States has given careful consideration to your excellency's notes of Jan. 8, Feb. 10, June 22, July 23, July 31 (2), Aug. 13 and to a note verbatim of the British embassy of Aug. 6, relating to restrictions upon American commerce by certain measures adopted by the British government during the present war. This government has delayed answering the earlier of these notes in the hope that the announced purpose of his majesty's government "to exercise their belligerent rights with every possible consideration for the interest of neutrals" and their intention of "removing all causes of avoidable delay in dealing with American cargoes" and of causing "the least possible amount of inconvenience to persons engaged in legitimate trade," as well as their "assurances to the United States government that they would make it their first aim to minimize the inconveniences" resulting from the "measures taken by the allied governments," would in practice not unjustifiably infringe upon the neutral rights of American citizens engaged in trade and commerce. It is, therefore, a matter of regret that this hope has not been realized, but that, on the contrary, interferences with American ships and cargoes destined in good faith to neutral ports and lawfully entitled to proceed have become increasingly vexatious, causing American shipowners and American merchants to complain to this government of the failure to take steps to prevent an exercise of belligerent power in contravention of their just rights. As the measures complained of proceed directly from orders issued by the British government, are executed by British authorities and arouse a reasonable apprehension that, if not resisted, they may be carried to an extent even more injurious to American interests, this government directs the attention of his majesty's government to the following considerations:

2. Without commenting upon the statistics presented by his majesty's government to show that the export trade of the United States has increased in volume since the war began further than to point out that the comparative values fail to take into account the increased price of commodities resulting from a state of war or to make any allowance for the diminution in the volume of trade which the neutral countries in Europe previously had with the nations at war, a diminution which compelled them to buy in other markets, I will pass directly to the matters which constitute the specific complaints of this government.

3. First. The detentions of American vessels and cargoes which have taken place since the opening of hostilities have, it is presumed, been pursuant to the enforcement of the orders in council which were issued on Aug. 20 and Oct. 29, 1914, and March 11, 1915, and relate to contraband traffic and to the interception of trade to and from Germany and Austria-Hungary. In practice these detentions have not been uniformly based on proofs obtained at the time of seizure, but many vessels have been detained while search was made for evidence of the contraband character of cargoes or of an intention to evade the nonintercourse measures of Great Britain. The question, consequently, has been one of evidence to support a belief of—in many cases a bare suspicion of—enemy destination, or occasionally of enemy origin of the goods involved. Whether this evidence should be obtained by search at sea before the vessel or cargo is taken into port, and what the character of the evidence should be which is necessary to justify the detention, are the points to which I direct your excellency's attention.

4. In regard to search at sea, an examination of the instructions issued to naval commanders of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, Japan, Spain, Germany and France from 1888 to the beginning of the present war shows that search in port was not contemplated by the government of any of these countries. On the contrary, the context of the respective instructions shows that search at sea was the procedure expected to be followed by the commanders. All of these instructions impress upon the naval officers the necessity of acting with the utmost moderation—and in some cases commanders are specifically instructed, in exercising the right of visit and search, to avoid undue deviation of the vessel from her course.

5. An examination of the opinions of the most eminent text writers on the laws of nations shows that they give practically no consideration to the question of search in port outside of examination in the course of regular prize court proceedings.

6. The assertion by his majesty's government that the position of the United States in relation to search at sea is inconsistent with its practice during the American civil war is based upon a misconception. Irregularities there may have been at the beginning of that war, but a careful search of the records of this government as to the practice of its commanders shows conclusively that there were no instances when vessels were brought into port for search prior to instituting prize court proceedings, or that captures were made upon other grounds than, in the words of the American note of Nov. 7, 1914, "evidence found on the ship under investigation and not upon circumstances ascertained from external sources." A copy of the instruction issued to American naval officers on Aug. 18, 1862, for their guidance during the civil war is appended.

7. The British contention that "modern conditions" justify bringing vessels into port for search is based upon the size and seaworthiness of modern carriers of commerce and the difficulty of uncovering the real transaction in the intricate trade operations of the present day. It is believed that commercial transactions of the present time, hampered as they are by censorship of telegraph and postal communication on the part of belligerents, are essentially no more complex and disguised than in the wars of recent years, during which the practice of obtaining evidence in port to determine whether a vessel should be held for prize proceedings was not adopted. The effect of the size and seaworthiness of merchant vessels upon their search at sea has been submitted to a board of naval experts, which reports that—

"At no period in history has it been considered necessary to remove every package of a ship's cargo to establish the character and nature of her trade or the service on which she is bound, nor is such removal necessary."

"The facilities for boarding and inspection of modern ships are in fact greater than in former times, and no difference, so far as the necessities of the case are concerned, can be seen between the search of a ship of a thousand tons and one of twenty thousand tons—except possibly a difference in time—for the purpose of establishing fully the character of her cargo and the nature of her service and destination. * * * This method would be a direct aid to the belligerents concerned in that it would release a belligerent vessel overhauling the neutral from its duty of search and set it free for further belligerent operations."

8. Turning to the character and sufficiency of the evidence of the contraband nature of shipments to warrant the detention of a suspected vessel or cargo for prize proceedings, it will be recalled that when a vessel is brought in for adjudication courts of prize have heretofore been bound by well-established and long-settled practice to consider at the first hearing only the ship's papers and documents, and the goods found on board, together with the written replies of the officers and seamen to standing interrogatories taken under oath, alone and separately, as soon as possible and without communication with or instruction by counsel, in order to avoid possibility of corruption and fraud.

9. Additional evidence was not allowed to be introduced except upon an order of the court for "further proof," and then only after the cause had been fully heard upon the facts already in evidence or when this evidence furnished a ground for prosecuting the inquiry further. This was the practice of the United States courts during the war of 1812, the American civil war and the Spanish-American war, as is evidenced by the reported decisions of those courts, and has been the practice of the British prize courts for over a century. This practice has been changed by the British prize court rules adopted for the present war by the order in council of Aug. 5. Under these new rules there is no longer a "first hearing" on the evidence derived from the ship, and the prize court is no longer precluded from receiving extrinsic evidence for which a suggestion has not been laid in the preparatory evidence. The result is, as pointed out above, that innocent vessels or cargoes are now seized and detained on mere suspicion while efforts are made to obtain evidence from extraneous sources to justify the detention and the commencement of prize proceedings. The effect of this new procedure is to subject traders to risk of loss, delay and expense so great and so burdensome as practically to destroy much of the export trade of the United States to neutral countries of Europe.

10. In order to place the responsibility for the delays of vessels and cargoes upon American claimants, the order in council of Oct. 29, 1914, as pointed out in the British note of Feb. 10, seeks to place the burden of proof as to the noncontraband character of the goods upon the claimant in cases where the goods are consigned "to order" or the consignee is not named or the consignee is within enemy territory. Without admitting that the onus probandi can rightfully be made to rest upon the claimant in these cases, it is sufficient for the purposes of this note to point out that the three classes of cases indicated in the order in council of Oct. 29 apply to only a few of the many seizures or detentions which have actually been made by British authorities.

11. The British contention that in the American civil war the captor was allowed to establish enemy destination by "all the evidence at his disposal," citing the Bermuda case (3 Wallace, 515), is not borne out by the facts of that case. The case of the Bermuda was one of "further proof," a proceeding not to determine whether the vessel should be detained and placed in a prize court, but whether the vessel, having been placed in prize court, should be restored or condemned. The same ruling was made in the case of the Sir William Peel (5 Wallace, 517). These cases, therefore, cannot be properly cited as supporting the course of a British captor in taking a vessel into port, there to obtain extrinsic evidence to justify him in detaining the vessel for prize proceedings.

12. The further contention that the greatly increased imports of neutral countries adjoining Great Britain's enemies raise a presumption that certain commodities, such as cotton, rubber and others more or less useful for military purposes, though destined for those countries, are intended for re-exportation to the belligerents who cannot import them directly, and that this fact justifies the detention for the purpose of examination of all vessels bound for the ports of those neutral countries, notwithstanding the fact that most of the articles of trade have been placed on the embargo lists of those countries, cannot be accepted as laying down a just or legal rule of evidence. Such a presumption is too remote from the facts and offers too great opportunity for abuse by the belligerent, who could, if the rule were adopted, entirely ignore neutral rights on the high seas and prey with impunity upon neutral commerce. To such a rule of legal presumption this government cannot accede, as it is opposed to those fundamental principles of justice which are the foundation of the jurisprudence of the United States and Great Britain.

13. Before passing from the discussion of this contention as to the presumption raised by increased importations to neutral countries, this government directs attention to the fact that his majesty's government admit that the British exports to those countries have also materially increased since the present war began. Thus Great Britain concededly shares in creating a condition which is relied upon as a sufficient ground to justify the interception of American goods destined to neutral European ports. If British exports to those ports should be still further increased, it is obvious that, under the rule of evidence contended for by the British government, the presumption of enemy destination could be applied to a greater number of American cargoes, and American trade would suffer to the extent that British trade benefited by the increase. Great Britain cannot expect the United States to submit to such manifest injustice or to permit the rights of its citizens to be so seriously impaired.

14. When goods are clearly intended to become incorporated in the mass of merchandise for sale in a neutral country it is an unwarranted and inquisitorial proceeding to detain shipments for examination as to whether those goods are ultimately destined for the enemy's country or use. Whatever may be the conjectural conclusions to be drawn from trade statistics, which, when stated by value, are of uncertain evidence as to quantity, the United States maintains the right to sell goods into the general stock of a neutral country and denounces as illegal and unjustifiable any attempt of a belligerent to interfere with that right on the ground that it suspects that the previous supply of such goods in the neutral country, which the imports renew or replace, has been sold to an enemy. That is a matter with which the neutral vendor has no concern and which can in no way affect his rights of trade. Moreover, even if goods listed as conditional contraband are destined to an enemy country through a neutral country, that fact is not in itself sufficient to justify their seizure.

15. In view of these considerations the United States, reiterating its position in this matter, has no other course but to contest seizures of vessels at sea upon conjectural suspicion and the practice of bringing them into port for the purpose, by search or otherwise, of obtaining evidence, for the purpose of justifying prize proceedings, of the carriage of contraband or of breaches of the order in council of March 11. Relying upon the regard of the British government for the principles of justice so frequently and uniformly manifested prior to the present war, this government anticipates that the British government will instruct their officers to refrain from these vexatious and illegal practices.

16. Secondly. The government of the United States further desires to direct particular attention to the so-called "blockade" measures imposed by the order in council of March 11. The British note of July 23, 1915, appears to confirm the intention indicated in the note of March 15, 1915, to establish a blockade so extensive as to prohibit trade with Germany or Austria-Hungary, even through the ports of neutral countries adjacent to them. Great Britain, however, admits that it should not, and gives assurances that it will not, interfere with trade with the countries contiguous to the territories of the enemies of Great Britain. Nevertheless, after over six months' application of the "blockade" order, the experience of American citizens has convinced the government of the United States that Great Britain has been unsuccessful in her efforts to distinguish between enemy and neutral trade. Arrangements have been made to create in these neutral countries special consignees, or consignment corporations, with power to refuse shipments and to determine when the state of the country's resources requires the importation of new commodities. American commercial interests are hampered by the intricacies of these arrangements, and many American citizens justly complain that their bona fide trade with neutral countries is greatly reduced as a consequence, while others assert that their neutral trade, which amounted annually to a large sum, has been entirely interrupted.

17. It makes this practice even more harassing to neutral traders that the British authorities require a consignor to prove that his shipments are not bound to an enemy of Great Britain, even when the articles are on the embargo list of the neutral country to which they are destined, and that notwithstanding the assertion in the last British note that interference with such trade by a belligerent can only take place "provided, of course, that he (the belligerent) can establish" that the commerce is with the enemy.

18. While the United States government was at first inclined to view with leniency the British measures which were termed in the correspondence, but not in the order in council of March 11, a "blockade," because of the assurances of the British government that inconvenience to neutral trade would be minimized by the discretion left to the courts in the application of the order in council and by the instructions which it was said would be issued to the administrative and other authorities having to do with the execution of the so-called "blockade" measures, this government is now forced to the realization that its expectations, which were fully set forth in its note of March 30, were based on a misconception of the intentions of the British government. Desiring to avoid controversy and in the expectation that the administration of the order in council would conform to the established rules of international law, this government has until now reserved the question of the actual validity of the order in council of March 11, in so far as it is considered by the government of Great Britain to establish a blockade within the meaning of that term as understood in the law and the practice of nations; but in the circumstances now developed it feels that it can no longer permit the validity of the alleged blockade to remain unchallenged.

19. The declaration of Paris in 1856, which has been universally recognized as correctly stating the rule of international law as to blockade, expressly declares that "blockades, in order to be binding, must be effective; that is to say, maintained by force sufficient really to prevent access to the coast of the enemy." The effectiveness of a blockade is manifestly a question of fact. It is common knowledge that the German coasts are open to trade with the Scandinavian countries and that German naval vessels cruise both in the North sea and the Baltic and seize and bring into German ports neutral vessels bound for Scandinavian and Danish ports. Furthermore, from the recent placing of cotton on the British list of contraband of war, it appears that the British government have themselves been forced to the conclusion that the blockade is ineffective to prevent shipments of cotton from reaching their enemies, or else that they are doubtful as to the legality of the form of blockade which they have sought to maintain.

20. Moreover, it is an essential principle which has been universally accepted that a blockade must apply impartially to the ships of all nations. This was set forth in the declaration of London, is found in the prize rules of Germany, France and Japan, and has long been admitted as a basic principle of the law of blockade. This principle, however, is not applied in the present British "blockade," for, as above indicated, German ports are notoriously open to traffic with the ports of Denmark, Norway and Sweden. So strictly has this principle been enforced in the past that in the prize council on appeal laid down, that if belligerents themselves trade with blockaded ports they cannot be regarded as effectively blockaded. (The Franciska, Moore P. C. 56). This decision has special significance at the present time, since it is a matter of common knowledge that Great Britain exports and re-exports large quantities of merchandise to Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland, whose ports, so far as American commerce is concerned, she regards as blockaded. In fact, the British note of Aug. 13 itself indicates that the British exports of many articles, such as cotton, lubricating oil, tobacco, cocoa, coffee, rice, wheat flour, barley, spices, tea, copra, etc., to these countries have greatly exceeded the British exports of the same articles for the corresponding period of 1914. The note also shows that there has been an important British trade with these countries in many other articles, such as machinery, beef, butter, cotton waste, etc.

21. Finally, there is no better settled principle of the law of nations than that which forbids the blockade of neutral ports in time of war. The declaration of London, though not regarded as binding upon the signatories because not ratified by them, has been expressly adopted by the British government without modification as to blockade in the British order in council of Oct. 29, 1914. Article 18 of the declaration declares specifically that "the blockading forces must not bar access to neutral ports or coasts." This is, in the opinion of this government, a correct statement of the universally accepted law as it exists to-day and as it existed prior to the declaration of London. The meaning of this statement is elucidated by Mr. Renault in the report of the drafting committee upon the convention, in which he states:

"This rule has been thought necessary the better to protect the commercial interests of neutral countries; it completes article 1, according to which a blockade must not extend beyond the ports and coasts of the enemy, which implies that, as it is an operation of war, it must not be directed against a neutral port, in spite of the importance to a belligerent of the part played by that port in supplying his adversary."

As the conference assembled at London upon the invitation of the British government, it is important to recall the instruction of Sir Edward Grey to the British delegates, "setting out the views of his majesty's government, founded on the decisions of the British courts," in which he says:

"A blockade must be confined to the ports and coast of the enemy, but it may be instituted of one port or of several ports or of the whole of the seaboard of the enemy. It may be instituted to prevent the ingress only or egress only, or both."

He added:

"Where the ship does not intend to proceed to the blockaded port, the fact that goods on board are to be sent on by sea or by inland transport is no ground for condemnation."

In support of this announcement, Sir Edward Grey referred to several decisions of British prize courts, among which an early one of 1801 held that goods shipped from London to Emden, thence inland or by canal to Amsterdam, then blockaded by sea, were not subject to condemnation for breach of blockade (Jonze Pieter, 4 C. R., 79). This has been the rule for a century, so that it is scarcely necessary to recall that the Matamoras cases, well known to the British government, support the same rule that neutral ports may not be blockaded, though "trade with unrestricted inland commerce between such a port and the enemy's territory impairs undoubtedly, and very seriously impairs, the value of a blockade of the enemy's coast."

22. Without mentioning the other customary elements of a regularly imposed blockade, such as notification of the particular coast line invested, the imposition of the penalty of confiscation, etc., which are lacking in the present British "blockade" policy, it need only be pointed out that, measured by the three universally conceded tests above set forth, the present British measures cannot be regarded as constituting a blockade in law, in practice or in effect.

23. It is incumbent upon the United States government, therefore, to give the British government notice that the blockade, which they claim to have instituted under the order in council of March 11, cannot be recognized as a legal blockade by the United States.

24. Since the government of Great Britain has laid much emphasis on the ruling of the Supreme court of the United States in the Springbok case, that goods of contraband character seized while going to the neutral port of Nassau, though actually bound for the blockaded ports of the south, were subject to condemnation, it is not inappropriate to direct attention to the British view of this case in England prior to the present war, as expressed by Sir Edward Grey in his instructions to the British delegates to the London conference in 1908:

"It is exceedingly doubtful whether the decision of the Supreme court was in reality meant to cover a case of blockade running in which no question of contraband arose. Certainly if such was the intention, the decision would pro tanto be in conflict with the practice of the British courts. His majesty's government sees no reason for departing from that practice, and you should endeavor to obtain general recognition of its correctness."

It may be pointed out also that the circumstances surrounding the Springbok case were essentially different from those of the present day to which the rule laid down in that case is sought to be applied. When the Springbok case arose the ports of the confederate states were effectively blockaded by the naval forces of the United States, though no neutral ports were closed, and a continuous voyage through a neutral port required an all-sea voyage terminating in an attempt to pass the blockading squadron.

25. Thirdly. It appears to be the position of Great Britain that if, as the United States alleges, American citizens or American interests are directly and adversely affected by the British policies of contraband and nonintercourse, resulting in interference with ships and cargoes, they should seek redress in the prize courts which the British government have established, and that, pending the exhaustion of such legal remedies with the result of a denial of justice, the British government "cannot continue to deal through the diplomatic channels with the individual cases."

26. It is declared that this was the course followed by the United States during the American civil war and the Spanish war, and that both countries have supported the practice by allowing their prize court decisions, when shown to be unjust or inadequate, to be reviewed by an international tribunal, as was done under the treaties of 1794 and 1871. The ground upon which this contention is put forth, and the results which would follow if the course of procedure suggested were accepted, give the impression that his majesty's government do not rely upon its soundness or strength. Nevertheless, since it has been advanced, I cannot refrain from presenting certain considerations which will show that the proposed course embodies the form rather than the substance of redress. The cases which the British government would have claimants present to their prize courts are essentially different from cases arising wholly within the jurisdiction of a foreign country. They result from acts committed by the British naval authorities upon the high seas, where the jurisdiction over neutral vessels is acquired solely by international law. Vessels of foreign nationality flying a neutral flag, and finding their protection in the country of that flag, are seized without facts warranting a reasonable suspicion that they are destined to blockaded ports of the enemy or that their cargoes are contraband, although the possession of such facts is, by international law, essential to render a seizure legal. The officers appear to find their justification in the orders in council and regulations of the British government in spite of the fact that in many of the present cases the orders in council and the regulations for their enforcement are themselves complained of by claimants as contrary to international law. Yet the very courts which, it is said, are to dispense justice to dissatisfied claimants are bound by the orders in council. This is unmistakably indicated to be the case in the British note of July 31, which states that—

"British prize courts 'according to the ancient form of commission under which they sit are to determine cases according to the course of admiralty and the law of nations and the statutes, rules and regulations for the time being in force in that behalf.'"

This principle, the note adds, has recently been announced and adhered to by the British prize court in the case of the Zamora. It is manifest therefore, that, if prize courts are bound by the laws and regulations under which seizures and detentions are made, and which claimants allege are in contravention of the law of nations, those courts are powerless to pass upon the real ground of complaint or to give redress for wrongs of this nature. Nevertheless, it is seriously suggested that claimants are free to request the prize court to rule upon a claim of conflict between an order in council and a rule of international law. How can a tribunal fettered in its jurisdiction and procedure by municipal enactments declare itself emancipated from their restrictions and at liberty to apply the rules of international law with freedom? The very laws and regulations which bind the court are now matters of dispute between the government of the United States and that of his Britannic majesty. If Great Britain followed, as she declares that she did, the course of first referring claimants to local remedies in cases arising out of American wars, it is presumed that she did so because of her knowledge or understanding that the United States had not sought to limit the jurisdiction of its courts of prize by instructions and regulations violative of the law and practice of nations, or open to such objection.

27. The British note of Feb. 10 states that the British government in the American civil war—"in spite of remonstrances from many quarters, placed full reliance on the American prize courts to grant redress to the parties interested in cases of alleged wrongful capture by American ships of war and put forward no claim until the opportunity for redress in those courts had been exhausted."

The government of the United States recalls that during the progress of that war Great Britain, in several instances, demanded through diplomatic channels damages for seizures and detentions of British ships alleged to have been made without legal justification. Among these may be mentioned the cases of the Magicienne, the Don Jose, the Labuan and the Saxon. Two of these cases were, at the time the demands were made, before American prize courts for adjudication. It is understood also that during the Boer war, when British authorities seized the German vessels, the Hertzog, the General and the Bundesrath, and released them without prize proceedings, compensation for damages suffered was arranged through diplomatic channels.

28. There is, furthermore, a real and far-reaching injury for which prize courts offer no means of reparation. It is the disastrous effect of the methods of the allied governments upon the general right of the United States to enjoy its international trade free from unusual and arbitrary limitations imposed by belligerent nations. Unwarranted delay and expense in bringing vessels into port for search and investigation upon mere suspicion has a deterrent effect upon trade ventures, however lawful they may be, which cannot be adequately measured in damages. The menace of interference with legal commerce causes vessels to be withdrawn from their usual trade routes and insurance on vessels and cargoes to be refused, while exporters for the same reason are unable or unwilling to send their goods to foreign markets and importers dare not buy commodities abroad because of fear of their illegal seizure or because they are unable to procure transportation. For such injuries there can be no remedy through the medium of courts established to adjust claims for goods detained or condemned. For specific injuries suffered by private interests prize courts, if they are free to apply the law of nations, might mete out an adequate indemnity, but for the injury to the trade of a nation by the menace of unwarranted interference with its lawful and established pursuit there can manifestly be found no remedy in the prize courts of Great Britain, to which United States citizens are referred for redress.

29. There is another ground why American citizens cannot submit their wrongs arising out of undue detentions and seizures to British prize courts for reparation which I cannot pass over unnoticed. It is the manner in which British courts obtain jurisdiction of such cases. The jurisdiction over merchant vessels on the high seas is that of the nation whose flag it rightfully flies. This is a principle of the law and practice of nations fundamental to the freedom of the high seas. Municipal enactments of a belligerent power cannot confer jurisdiction over or establish rules of evidence governing the legality of seizures of vessels of neutral nationality on the high seas. International law alone controls the exercise of the belligerent right to seize and detain such vessels. Municipal laws and regulations in violation of the international rights of another nation cannot be extended to the vessels of the latter on the high seas so as to justify a belligerent nation bringing them into its ports and, having illegally brought them within its territorial jurisdiction, compelling them to submit to the domestic laws and regulations of that nation. Jurisdiction obtained in such a manner is contrary to those principles of justice and equity which all nations should respect. Such practice should invalidate any disposition by a municipal court of property thus brought before it. The government of the United States has, therefore, viewed with surprise and concern the attempt of his majesty's government to confer upon the British prize courts jurisdiction by this illegal exercise of force in order that these courts may apply to vessels and cargoes of neutral nationalities seized on the high seas municipal laws and orders which can only rightfully be enforceable within the territorial waters of Great Britain, or against vessels of British nationality when on the high seas.

30. In these circumstances the United States government feels that it cannot reasonably be expected to advise its citizens to seek redress before tribunals which are, in its opinion, unauthorized by the unrestricted application of international law to grant reparation, nor to refrain from presenting their claims directly to the British government through diplomatic channels.

31. This government is advised that vessels and cargoes brought in for examination prior to prize proceedings are released only upon condition that costs and expenses incurred in the course of such unwarranted procedure, such as pilotage, wharfage, demurrage, harbor dues, warehouseage, unloading costs, etc., be paid by the claimants or on condition that they sign a waiver of right to bring subsequent claims against the British government for these exactions. This government is loath to believe that such ungenerous treatment will continue to be accorded American citizens by the government of his Britannic majesty, but in order that the position of the United States government may be clearly understood I take this opportunity to inform your excellency that this government denies that the charges incident to such detentions are rightfully imposed upon innocent trade or that any waiver of indemnity exacted from American citizens under such conditions of duress can preclude them from obtaining redress through diplomatic channels or by whatever other means may be open to them.

32. Before closing this note, in which frequent reference is made to contraband traffic and contraband articles, it is necessary, in order to avoid possible misconception, that it should be clearly understood by his majesty's government that there is no intention in this discussion to commit the government of the United States to a policy of waiving any objections which it may entertain as to the propriety and right of the British government to include in their list of contraband of war certain articles which have been so included. The United States government reserves the right to make this matter the subject of a communication to his majesty's government at a later day.

33. I believe it has been conclusively shown that the methods sought to be employed by Great Britain to obtain and use evidence of enemy destination of cargoes bound for neutral ports and to impose a contraband character upon such cargoes are without justification; that the blockade upon which such methods are partly founded is ineffective, illegal, and indefensible; that the judicial procedure offered as a means of reparation for an international injury is inherently defective for the purpose; and that in many cases jurisdiction is asserted in violation of the law of nations. The United States, therefore, cannot submit to the curtailment of its neutral rights by these measures, which are admittedly retaliatory, and therefore illegal in conception and in nature, and intended to punish the enemies of Great Britain for alleged illegalities on their part. The United States might not be in a position to object to them if its interests and the interests of all neutrals were unaffected by them, but, being affected, it cannot with complacency suffer further subordination of its rights and interests to the plea that the exceptional geographic position of the enemies of Great Britain requires or justifies oppressive and illegal practices.

34. The government of the United States desires, therefore, to impress most earnestly upon his majesty's government that it must insist that the relations between it and his majesty's government be governed, not by a policy of expediency, but by those established rules of international conduct upon which Great Britain in the past has held the United States to account when the latter nation was a belligerent engaged in a struggle for national existence. It is of the highest importance to neutrals not only of the present day but of the future that the principles of international right be maintained unimpaired.

35. This task of championing the integrity of neutral rights which have received the sanction of the civilized world against the lawless conduct of belligerents arising out of the bitterness of the great conflict which is now wasting the countries of Europe, the United States unhesitatingly assumes, and to the accomplishment of that task it will devote its energies, exercising always that impartiality which from the outbreak of the war it has sought to exercise in its relations with the warring nations.

I inclose as supplements to this instruction the United States navy order of Aug. 18, 1862, and a statement regarding vessels detained by British authorities. These two documents should be transmitted as inclosures in your note to Sir Edward Grey.

I am, etc.,

ROBERT LANSING.

Inclosures: United States navy order of Aug. 18, 1862, and statement regarding vessels detained by British authorities.

Appendix No. 1

Instructions of the Secretary of the Navy to flag officers commanding squadrons and officers commanding cruisers, relative to the right of search.

Navy Department, Aug. 18, 1862.

Sir: Some recent occurrences in the capture of vessels and matters pertaining to the blockade render it necessary that there should be a recapitulation of the instructions heretofore from time to time given, and also of the restrictions and precautions to be observed by our squadrons and cruisers.

It is essential, in the remarkable contest now waging, that we should exercise great forbearance with great firmness, and manifest to the world that it is the intention of our government, while asserting and maintaining our own rights, to respect and scrupulously regard the rights of others. It is in this view that the following instructions are explicitly given:

First. That you will exercise constant vigilance to prevent supplies of arms, munitions, and contraband of war from being conveyed to the insurgents, but that under no circumstances will you seize any vessel within the waters of a friendly nation.

Secondly. That while diligently exercising the right of visitation on all suspected vessels, you are in no case authorized to chase and fire at a foreign vessel without showing your colors and giving her the customary preliminary notice of a desire to speak and visit her.

Thirdly. That when that visit is made, the vessel is not then to be seized without a search carefully made, so far as to render it reasonable to believe that she is engaged in carrying contraband of war for or to the insurgents, and to their ports directly or indirectly by transshipment, or otherwise violating the blockade; and that if, after visitation and search, it shall appear to your satisfaction that she is in good faith and without contraband, actually bound and passing from one friendly or so-called neutral port to another, and not bound or proceeding to or from a port in the possession of the insurgents, then she cannot be lawfully seized.

Fourthly. That, to avoid difficulty and error in relation to papers which strictly belong to the captured vessel, and mails that are carried, or parcels under official seals, you will, in the words of the law, "preserve all the papers and writings found on board and transmit the whole of the originals unaltered to the judge of the district to which such prize is ordered to proceed"; but official seals, or locks, or fastenings of foreign authorities, are in no case, nor on any pretext, to be broken, or parcels covered by them read by any naval authorities, but all bags or other things covering such parcels, and duly seized and fastened by foreign authorities, will be, in the discretion of the United States officer to whom they may come, delivered to the consul, commanding naval officer, or legation of the foreign government, to be opened, upon the understanding that whatever is contraband or important as evidence concerning the character of a captured vessel will be remitted to the prize court or to the secretary of state at Washington, or such sealed bag or parcels may be at once forwarded to this department, to the end that the proper authorities of the foreign government may receive the same without delay.

You are specially informed that the fact that a suspicious vessel has been indicated to you as cruising in any limit which has been prescribed by this department does not in any way authorize you to depart from the practice of the rules of visitation, search, and capture prescribed by the law of nations.

Very respectfully,

GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Appendix No. 2.

Statement regarding vessels detained by British authorities. Sept. 10, 1915.

1. Vessels whose cargoes and papers have been of such a character as to require but brief time for examination have been held in British ports, according to this government's information, for prolonged periods, in some instances for more than a month, and then released without the institution of prize court proceedings.

The steamer Chester, which sailed from Bator Rouge for Rotterdam with a cargo of illuminating oil, was taken into Falmouth Sept. 21, 1914, and held until Nov. 4 of that year.

The steamer Ocean, carrying the same kind of a cargo, from New York to Rotterdam, was taken into Plymouth Sept. 23, 1914, and similarly released Nov. 5.

The steamer Charlots, and the steamer New York, carrying similar cargoes, were taken into British ports on Sept. 30 and Oct. 12, 1914, respectively, and similarly released on Oct. 27.

The steamers American and Rotterdam, carrying cargoes of oil to Rotterdam, were also detained under conditions similar to those of the vessels just mentioned in the fall of 1914.

The steamer Christian Knudsen, carrying a cargo of oil in bulk, consigned to a Danish corporation in Copenhagen, was brought into the port of Kirkwall, detained for eleven days and then released.

Vessels carrying oil from the United States to long-established markets in Scandinavian countries have repeatedly been detained without being sent to the prize court for adjudication. Among them may be mentioned the Brindilla, the Platania, the Wico, the Polarine, the Pioneer, the Llama, the Muskogee, and the John D. Rockefeller.

The steamer Denver, which carried a full cargo of cotton from Norfolk to Bremen and which had been loaded under the supervision of a British consular officer, was taken into Kirkwall in January last, as the department was informed by the British government, just to examine her papers and to verify her cargo.

The George W. Hawley was held for a month because she refused to comply with a requirement of the British authorities to discharge a single shipment, the illegal destination of which does not appear to have been disclosed by any evidence. The vessel carried a mixed cargo, including a shipment of oil. The British authorities insisted that the vessel should discharge the oil, which, the shipper represented, was consigned to one of its long-established agents in Sweden. Finally it was announced that the vessel should be released as an act of grace.

The steamer Wico was held by the British authorities last March. This government was advised that the British minister at Stockholm had informed the Swedish foreign office that the vessel had arrived in a British port with a full cargo of oil for a concern in Stockholm, and that, in view of the recent seizure by a German man-of-war of the steamship Bryssel and her cargo, the British government required complete assurances from the Swedish government before the Wico could be allowed to proceed to destination that she would not share the fate of the Bryssel.

Subsequently this government was informed that the vessel had been allowed to proceed, but that the British government felt that, in the event of further cargoes going to Stockholm being seized by German ships, the whole question of permitting oil cargoes to proceed to that destination would have to be seriously reconsidered.

The steamer Llama, carrying a cargo of oil to a Scandinavian port, was taken into Kirkwall and subsequently released on June 5 last. After departing from Kirkwall the ship was again arrested on June 6, and although the officer of the war vessel which seized the Llama apparently was shown the ship's release papers, he placed a prize crew on board and ordered the vessel to Aberdeen and thence to Leith, where she was finally released on June 12, although she could not proceed until June 15, owing to a shortage of coal.

2. Vessels have been held until they have re-consigned their cargoes to a consignee in a neutral country designated by the British government.

The steamer Seguranca, which carried a general cargo from New York to the Netherlands, was detained at a great loss to the owners of the vessel and to the shippers in a British port for the greater part of last April, in order that her cargo might be re-consigned to the Netherlands Oversea trust. The manifest showed that the entire cargo was consigned to named consignees in the Netherlands and was accompanied by a certificate of the British consul-general in New York stating that the loading was supervised by his inspector, and that the vessel contained no cargo other than that specified in the manifest. A large part of the cargo, consisting of fresh fruit stored in the hold of the vessel, was subject to decay with great rapidity.

A similar requirement was imposed on the steamer F. J. Lisman, which during last June was detained at London. It appears that, after a prolonged detention of the ship of over a month, representatives of the shippers were compelled to discharge both contraband and noncontraband articles, and that the captain and the shippers, finding their efforts to comply with the requirements of the British authorities hopeless, abandoned the voyage.

The steamers A. A. Raven and Vitalia, carrying articles listed as conditional contraband, were detained in a British port in March last until the goods shipped to specific consignees in Holland could be consigned to the Netherlands Oversea trust.

The steamer Neches was detained last May for about two weeks in order that a shipment of cotton destined for Rotterdam might be consigned to the Netherlands Oversea trust.

The steamer Zandijk was detained last June, as the department was informed, while the British minister at The Hague made inquiries as to whether the Netherlands Oversea trust had accepted the consignment of the cargo.

3. Detentions have been made without evidence amounting to probable cause.

The steamer Annam, which was detained at Kirkwall last April, carried a cargo of food products from the United States to Swedish ports. She was detained owing to a "suspicion," as the British government stated, that a part of its cargo was destined for Germany.

The steamer Dronning Olga was detained at Kirkwall in April last and the cargo, which consisted of cotton and food products, was placed in the prize court on the ground, as the department was informed by the British government, that it was "believed" that it was ultimately destined for Germany.

The steamer Hilding, which sailed from New York for Copenhagen with a general cargo consisting largely of food products, was seized and taken into Leith last April, and this government was informed that the cargo had been seized as contraband with the expectation of holding it under the order in council of March 11, 1915, if the charge that the goods were contraband should fail.

Numerous similar instances might be cited.

The steamers Christian Knudsen and Platania, carrying oil from New York to Denmark, were detained by the British authorities last fall, taken into British ports, and held until the British government, as they stated, could make an investigation as to the destination of the cargoes. Furthermore, this government was informed that the vessels had been detained pending the receipt of guaranties from Denmark against the exportation of the cargoes, and that the orders were given for the release of the vessels on the receipt of satisfactory guaranties.

The steamer Brindilla, which sailed from New York Oct. 13 last with a cargo of oil for Alexandria, was taken into port at Halifax and later released, as the department was informed, when the British authorities received information that the ship's cargo was expected at Alexandria.

The steamer Ambra was taken into a British port in July last, and this government was informed that this vessel was held pending inquiries that had been instituted concerning destination of certain items of her cargo. About a week later the vessel was allowed to proceed.

In July last this government was informed by the British government that the prolonged detention of the oil steamers Polarine, Platania, and Pioneer was due to the fact that his majesty's government's attention had latterly been drawn to the very large quantities of oil which had been shipped to Scandinavian countries during the last few months; that there had been every reason to suspect that some of the oil was destined for enemy countries; and that the arrival of the steamers in quick succession necessitated the institution of inquiries as to the ultimate destination of the oil.

The owners of these vessels and their cargoes complained to the government of the United States against their detention, stating that the vessels carried the usual cargoes consigned in good faith to long-established subsidiaries in neutral countries, and further representing that, since supplies from Russia and Roumania had been prevented from entering Scandinavian ports, a large increase of business with them had been expected, but it had been found that during the first five months of the year 1915 total shipments of all petroleum products to these countries were less than for the same period last year, although business in previous years had steadily increased.

4. Vessels have been held, according to statements of the British government, because of the manner in which shipments have been consigned.

The steamer Elnorjari was brought into Kirkwall last May and its cargo of cottonseed cake, shipped from Newport News to Denmark, which the shippers represented was to be used exclusively for consumption in Denmark, was seized. This government was informed that the cargo was discharged because it was consigned "to order."

The steamers Alfred Nobel, Bjornstjerne Bjornson and Friedland were seized last autumn because their cargoes were consigned "to order."

The shipments on the steamers America and Artemis have been placed in prize court under the order in council of March 11, 1915, because, the goods being consigned by the shippers to themselves, there was no guaranty of their ultimate destination.

5. Goods have been seized by the British government on the ground, as this government has been informed, that the country to which they were shipped had not prohibited their export.

In the fall of the year 1914 copper shipped from the United States to Sweden on the steamers Francisco, Antares, Idaho, Tyr and Toronto was seized by the British authorities because, as the British government stated, the Swedish government had not yet prohibited the re-exportation of copper from Sweden.

A consignment of rubber on the Swedish ship

Zamora had been placed in prize court last January because, as the British government stated, of the absence of a comprehensive prohibition on the exportation of rubber in all its forms from Denmark.

6. The British authorities have repeatedly seized articles classified as contraband, articles classified as conditional contraband, as well as non-contraband goods shipped to Scandinavian countries, to the Netherlands, and to Italy, then neutral, although the re-exportation of such commodities from these countries had been forbidden.

In December last the steamer Tellus was ordered to discharge a shipment of copper shipped from New York directly to a consignee in Milan, Italy, although by an Italian decree of Nov. 13, 1914, the exportation of goods shipped in this manner was forbidden.

The steamer Joseph W. Fordney was seized four miles off the coast of Norway and, in charge of a prize crew, brought into Kirkwall April 8 last. The ship's manifest showed that the cargo consisted entirely of cattle fodder consigned to a person in Malmö, Sweden. It appeared, from information presented to this government, that an affidavit regarding the character and destination of the cargo, made by the shipper of the entire cargo, was attached to the bill of lading, and that this affidavit contained a certification by the British consul-general and the Swedish consul and also a statement by the latter to the effect that the exportation from Sweden of the goods of which the cargo consisted was prohibited. The vessel was brought into a British port and her cargo discharged. This government was informed by the British government that, apart from the uncertainty of the address of the consignee of the cargo of this vessel, his majesty's government had evidence that the cargo was not destined for bona fide Swedish consumption, but was intended for Germany.

Numerous other similar instances might be cited, including those of the detention of vessels carrying oil to Scandinavian ports which have been mentioned.

7. Detentions have been made pending assurances that embargoed goods would be allowed to pass through a neutral country to Great Britain's allies.

The steamer Leelanaw, which carried a cargo of cotton from Galveston to Gothenburg for transshipment to Moscow, was detained in a British port early in June last. Relative to the detention of this vessel the British foreign office said: "In view of the fact that cotton has now been placed on the Swedish prohibition of export list, his majesty's government have not considered it advisable to allow this last cargo to go on to Gothenburg until they are assured that there is a fair chance of it reaching its declared ultimate destination."

After nearly a month's detention the vessel was released on the understanding that she should proceed directly to Archangel.

The steamers Jentland and Syrius appear to have been recently detained under circumstances similar to those of the steamer Leelanaw.

8. From time to time this government has been informed of the seizure of cargoes on the ground that consignees have been known to trade with the enemy or because they were suspected of doing so.

In January last this government was advised by the British government that the British government had been compelled to place in prize court a consignment of rubber on board the Swedish vessel Zamora, the consignee of these goods being regarded with grave suspicion, and there being reason to believe that the ultimate destination of the rubber was the enemy forces.

9. Vessels have been seized and brought into port and have been required by the British authorities to pay pilotage, harbor, unloading, warehouse, storage or other dues, costs and expenses in advance of a judicial determination of the validity of the seizure of vessel or cargo.

Instances of such treatment of vessels may be found in the cases of the detention of the steamer Neches last May, the Ogechee, which was seized last April, and the Antilla, which was seized in February last and subjected to a prolonged detention. In the case of the last mentioned ship it appears, however, that the cost of discharging was borne by the British government.

10. Detention of vessels proceeding from European ports.

The steamer Ogechee, which left Bremen April 5 last for the United States, was detained at Sharpness and compelled to discharge its entire cargo, which consisted of approximately 200 shipments of goods urgently needed by American citizens. In most if not all cases it appears that ownership of these goods at the time of the seizure had passed to American consignees. In many instances American citizens had contracted for the sale of the goods consigned to them and were prevented from carrying out their contracts.

The release of shipments on the vessel has been allowed on the production of proofs of American ownership of the goods prior to March 11, 1915. American consignees in order to avoid loss have endeavored to comply with the requirements in the presentation of proofs.

The steamer Neches, which sailed from Rotterdam to the United States, was brought to London and compelled, in June last, to discharge cargo on the ground, apparently, that the goods originated partly in Belgium. The vessel was detained about a month and after having been damaged to the extent of approximately £1,500 as a result of a collision with another vessel while under the control of the British admiralty, and after having been involved in litigation growing out of such collision, was allowed to proceed.

The following is a list of the vessels detained prior to March 11 last, among which are some regarding the detention of which details have been briefly stated in this memorandum:

Platuria, Brindilla, John D. Rockefeller, Kroonland, Noordam, Rotterdam, Sandefjord, Thomas J. Fordney, Fram, Edward Pierce, Ellen, Tellus, Sif, Kim, Canton, Ogechee, Friedland, Gallileo, Uller, Verona, Zuiderdijk, Greenbrier, Herm, Arkansas, Ascot, Carolyn, Breiford, Bergensfjord, Bjornstjerne Bjornson, Ida Cuneo, Kentucky, General Minnetonka, General Caloric, Denver.

[Appended is a further list of some 350 vessels carrying American cargoes which, sailing from American to Scandinavian ports, were diverted by British authorities to the port of Kirkwall, or called at that port under instructions from owners, from March 11, 1915, to the end of August.]

THE LUSITANIA CASE.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.

Department of State, Washington, May 13, 1915.

Please call on the minister of foreign affairs and after reading to him this communication leave with him a copy.

In view of recent acts of the German authorities in violation of American rights on the high seas which culminated in the torpedoing and sinking of the British steamship Lusitania on May 7, 1915, by which over 100 American citizens lost their lives, it is clearly wise and desirable that the government of the United States and the Imperial German government should come to a clear and full understanding as to the grave situation which has resulted.

The sinking of the British passenger steamer Falaba by a German submarine on March 23, through which Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, was drowned; the attack on April 28 on the American vessel Cushing by a German aeroplane; the torpedoing on May 1 of the American vessel Gulflight by a German submarine, as a result of which two or more American citizens met their death; and, finally, the torpedoing and sinking of the steamship Lusitania, constitute a series of events which the government of the United States has observed with growing concern, distress and amazement.

ernment in matters of international right, and particularly with regard to the freedom of the seas; having learned to recognize the German views and the German influence in the field of international obligation as always engaged upon the side of justice and humanity; and having understood the instructions of the Imperial German government to its naval commanders to be upon the same plane of humane action prescribed by the naval codes of other nations, the government of the United States was loath to believe—it cannot now bring itself to believe—that these acts, so absolutely contrary to the rules, the practices and the spirit of modern warfare, could have the countenance or sanction of that great government. It feels it to be its duty, therefore, to address the Imperial German government concerning them with the utmost frankness and in the earnest hope that it is not mistaken in expecting action on the part of the Imperial German government which will correct the unfortunate impressions which have been created and vindicate once more the position of that government with regard to the sacred freedom of the seas.

The government of the United States has been apprised that the Imperial German government considered themselves to be obliged by the extraordinary circumstances of the present war and the measures adopted by their adversaries in seeking to cut Germany off from all commerce, to adopt methods of retaliation which go much beyond the ordinary methods of warfare at sea, in the proclamation of a war zone from which they have warned neutral ships to keep away. This government has already taken occasion to inform the Imperial German government that it cannot admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning of danger to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality; and that it must hold the Imperial German government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, intentional or incidental. It does not understand the Imperial German government to question those rights. It assumes, on the contrary, that the Imperial government accept as of course that the rule that the lives of noncombatants, whether they be of neutral citizenship or citizens of one of the nations at war, cannot lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unarmed merchantman, and recognize also, as all other nations do, the obligation to take the usual precaution of visit and search to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag.

The government of the United States therefore desires to call the attention of the Imperial German government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and, if they cannot put a prize crew on board her, they cannot sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her to the mercy of the sea in her small boats. These facts, it is understood, the Imperial German government frankly admit. We are informed that in the instances of which we have spoken time enough for even that poor measure of safety was not given, and in at least two of the cases cited not so much as a warning was received. Manifestly submarines cannot be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity.

American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in travelling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights.

There was recently published in the newspapers of the United States, I regret to inform the imperial German government, a formal warning, purporting to come from the imperial German embassy at Washington, addressed to the people of the United States, and stating, in effect, that any citizen of the United States who exercised his right of free travel upon the seas would do so at his peril if his journey should take him within the zone of waters within which the imperial German navy was using submarines against the commerce of Great Britain and France, notwithstanding the respectful but very earnest protest of his government, the government of the United States. I do not refer to this for the purpose of calling the attention of the imperial German government at this time to the surprising irregularity of a communication from the imperial German embassy at Washington addressed to the people of the United States through the newspapers, but only for the purpose of pointing out that no warning that an unlawful and inhumane act will be committed can possibly be accepted as an excuse or palliation for that act or as an abatement of the responsibility for its commission.

Long acquainted as this government has been with the character of the imperial German government and with the high principles of equity by which they have in the past been actuated and guided, the government of the United States cannot believe that the commanders of the vessels which committed these acts of lawlessness did so except under a misapprehension of the orders issued by the imperial German naval authorities. It takes it for granted that, at least within the practical possibilities of such a case, the commanders, even of submarines, were expected to do nothing that would involve the lives of noncombatants or the safety of neutral ships, even at the cost of failing of their object of capture or destruction. It confidently expects, therefore, that the imperial German government will disavow the acts of which the government of the United States complains, that they will make reparation so far as reparation is possible for injuries which are without measure, and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare for which the imperial German government have in the past so wisely and so firmly contended.

The government and people of the United States look to the imperial German government for just, prompt and enlightened action in this vital matter with the greater confidence because the United States and Germany are bound together not only by special ties of friendship but also by the explicit stipulations of the treaty of 1828 between the United States and the kingdom of Prussia.

Expressions of regret and offers of reparation in case of the destruction of neutral ships sunk by mistake, while they may satisfy international obligations if no loss of life results, cannot justify or excuse a practice the natural and necessary effect of which is to subject neutral nations and neutral persons to new and immeasurable risks.

The imperial German government will not expect the government of the United States to omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment.

— BRYAN.

THE GERMAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.

(Telegram.) Berlin, May 28, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency Mr.

James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated the 15th instant, on the subject of the impairment of many American interests by the German submarine war.

The imperial government has subjected the statements of the government of the United States to a careful examination and has the lively wish on its part also to contribute in a convincing and friendly manner to clear up any misunderstandings which may have entered into the relations of the two governments through the events mentioned by the American government.

With regard first to the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Guilflight, the American embassy has already been informed that it is far from the German government to have any intention of ordering attacks by submarines or flyers on neutral vessels in the zone which have not been guilty of any hostile act; on the contrary, the most explicit instructions have been repeatedly given the German armed forces to avoid attacking such vessels. If neutral vessels have come to grief through the German submarine war during the past few months by mistake it is a question of isolated and exceptional cases which are traceable to the misuse of flags by the British government in connection with carelessness or suspicious actions on the part of the captains of the vessels. In all cases where a neutral vessel through no fault of its own has come to grief through the German submarine or flyers according to the facts as ascertained by the German government this government has expressed its regret at the unfortunate occurrence and promised indemnification where the facts justified it. The German government will treat the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Guilflight according to the same principles. An investigation of these cases is in progress. Its results will be communicated to the embassy shortly. The investigation might, if thought desirable, be supplemented by an international commission of inquiry, pursuant to title three of The Hague convention of Oct. 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In the case of the sinking of the English steamer Falaba, the commander of the German submarine had the intention of allowing passengers and crew ample opportunity to save themselves.

It was not until the captain disregarded the order to lay to and took to flight, sending up rocket signals for help, that the German commander ordered the crew and passengers by signals and megaphone to leave the ship within ten minutes. As a matter of fact, he allowed them twenty-three minutes and did not fire the torpedo until suspicious steamers were hurrying to the aid of the Falaba.

With regard to the loss of life when the British passenger steamer Lusitania was sunk, the German government has already expressed its deep regret to the neutral governments concerned that nationals of those countries lost their lives on that occasion. The imperial government must state for the rest the impression that certain important facts most directly connected with the sinking of the Lusitania may have escaped the attention of the government of the United States. It therefore considers it necessary in the interest of the clear and full understanding aimed at by either government primarily to convince itself that two reports of the facts which are before the two governments are complete and in agreement.

The government of the United States proceeds on the assumption that the Lusitania is to be considered as an ordinary unarmed merchant vessel. The imperial government begs in this connection to point out that the Lusitania was one of the largest and fastest English commerce steamers, constructed with government funds as auxiliary cruisers, and is expressly included in the navy list published by the British admiralty. It is, moreover, known to the imperial government from reliable information furnished by its officials and neutral passengers that for some time practically all the more valuable English merchant vessels have been provided with guns, ammunition and other weapons and re-enforced with a crew specially practiced in manning guns. According to reports at hand here, the Lusitania when she left New York undoubtedly had guns on board which were mounted under decks and masked.

The imperial government furthermore has the honor to direct the particular attention of the American government to the fact that the British admiralty by a secret instruction of February of this year advised the British merchant marine not only to seek protection behind neutral flags and markings, but even when so disguised to attack German submarines by ramming them. High rewards have been offered by the British government as a special incentive for the destruction of the submarines by merchant vessels, and such rewards have already been paid out. In view of these facts, which are satisfactorily known to it, the imperial government is unable to consider English merchant vessels any longer as "undefended territory" in the zone of maritime war designated by the admiralty staff of the imperial German navy. The German commanders are consequently no longer in a position to observe the rules of capture otherwise usual and with which they invariably complied before this. Lastly, the imperial government must specially point out that on her last trip the Lusitania, as on earlier occasions, had Canadian troops and munitions on board, including no less than 5,400 cases of ammunition destined for the destruction of brave German soldiers who are fulfilling with self-sacrifice and devotion their duty in the service of the fatherland. The German government believes that it acts in just self-defense when it seeks to protect the lives of its soldiers by destroying ammunition destined for the enemy with the means of war at its command. The English steamship company must have been aware of the dangers to which passengers on board the Lusitania were exposed under the circumstances. In taking them on board in spite of this the company quite deliberately tried to use the lives of American citizens as protection for the ammunition carried and violated the clear provisions of American laws which expressly prohibit and provide punishment for the carrying of passengers on ships which have explosives on board. The company thereby wantonly caused the death of so many passengers. According to the express report of the submarine commander concerned, which is further confirmed by all other reports, there can be no doubt that the rapid sinking of the Lusitania was primarily due to the explosion of the cargo of ammunition caused by the torpedo. Otherwise, in all human probability, the passengers of the Lusitania would have been saved.

The imperial government holds the facts recited above to be of sufficient importance to recommend them to a careful examination by the American government. The imperial government begs to reserve a final statement of its position with regard to the demands made in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania until a reply is received from the American government, and believes that it should recall here that it took note with satisfaction of the American government in Berlin and London with a view to paving the way for a modus vivendi for the conduct of maritime war between Germany and Great Britain. The imperial government furnished at that time ample evidence of its good will by its willingness to consider these proposals. The realization of these proposals failed, as is known, on account of their rejection by the government of Great Britain.

The undersigned requests his excellency the ambassador to bring the above to the knowledge of the American government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, etc. VON JAGOW.

THE GERMAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO
THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.
(Translation.) Berlin, June 1, 1915.

With reference to the note of May 28, the undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency the ambassador of the United States of America, Mr. James W. Gerard, that the examination undertaken on the part of the German government concerning the cases of the American steamers Gulflight and Cushing has led to the following conclusions:

In regard to the attack on the steamer Gulflight, the commander of a German submarine saw on the afternoon of May 1, in the vicinity of the Scilly islands, a large merchant steamer coming toward him, which was accompanied by two small vessels. These latter took up such a position in relation to the steamer that they formed a regulation safeguard against submarines; one of them, moreover, had a wireless apparatus, which is not, as a rule, usual with small vessels. From this it was evidently a case of English convoy vessels. Since such vessels are regularly armed the submarine could not approach the steamer on the surface of the water without running the danger of destruction. On the other hand, it was to be assumed that the steamer was of considerable value to the British government, since it was so particularly guarded. The commander could see no neutral markings on it of any kind; that is, distinctive marks painted on the freeboard, recognizable at a distance, such as are now usual on neutral ships in the English zone of naval warfare. In consequence, he arrived at the conclusion from all the circumstances that he had to deal with an English steamer and attacked submerged. The torpedo came in the immediate neighborhood of one of the convoy ships, which at once rapidly approached the point of firing, so that the submarine was forced to go to a great depth to avoid being rammed; the conclusion of the commander that an English convoy ship was concerned was in this way confirmed. That the attacked steamer carried the American flag was first observed at the moment of firing the shot. The fact that the steamship was pursuing a course which led neither to nor from America was a further reason why it did not occur to the commander of the submarine that he had to deal with an American steamship.

Upon scrutiny of the time and place of the occurrence described, the German government has become convinced that the attacked steamship was actually the American steamship Gulflight. According to the attendant circumstances, there can be no doubt that the attack is not to be attributed to the fault of the commander, but to an unfortunate accident. The German government expresses its regrets to the government of the United States concerning this incident and declares itself ready to furnish full recompense for the damage thereby sustained by American citizens. It begs to leave it to the discretion of the American government to present a statement of this damage, or, if doubts may arise over individual points, to designate an expert, who would have to determine together with a German expert the amount of the damage.

It has not yet been possible by means of an inquiry fully to clear up the case of the American steamship Cushing. According to the official reports available, only one merchant steamship was attacked by a German flying machine in the vicinity of Nordhind lightship. The German aviator considered the vessel as hostile, and was forced to consider it as such because it carried no flag and also because of no further recognizable neutral markings. The attack, which was carried into effect by means of four bombs, was of course not aimed at any American ship.

That, however, the ship attacked was the American steamer Cushing is not impossible, considering the time and place of the occurrence; nevertheless, the German government accordingly requests the American government to communicate to it the material which has been submitted for judgment, in order that, with this as a basis, it can take a further position in regard to the matter.

While the undersigned leaves it to the ambassador to bring the foregoing to the immediate attention of his government, he takes this opportunity, etc. — VON JAGOW.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE AD INTERIM TO THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.

Department of State, Washington, June 9, 1915.
American Ambassador, Berlin: You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister of foreign affairs:

In compliance with your excellency's request, I did not fail to transmit to my government immediately upon their receipt your note of May 28 in reply to my note of May 15, and your supplementary note of June 1, setting forth the conclusions so far as reached by the imperial German government concerning the attacks on the American steamers Cushing and Gulflight. I am now instructed by my government to communicate the following in reply:

The government of the United States notes with gratification the full recognition by the imperial German government, in discussing the cases of the Cushing and Gulflight, of the principle of the freedom of all parts of the open sea to neutral ships and the frank willingness of the imperial German government to acknowledge and meet its liability where the fact of attack upon neutral ships "which have not been guilty of any hostile act" by German aircraft or vessels of war is satisfactorily established, and the government of the United States will in due course lay before the imperial German government, as it requests, full information concerning the attack on the steamer Cushing.

With regard to the sinking of the steamer Falaba, by which an American citizen lost his life, the government of the United States is surprised to find the imperial German government contending that an effort on the part of a merchantman to escape capture and secure assistance alters the obligation of the officer seeking to make the capture in respect of the safety of the lives of those on board the merchantman, although the vessel had ceased her attempt to escape when torpedoed. These are not new circumstances. They have been in the minds of statesmen and of international jurists throughout the development of naval warfare, and the government of the United States does not understand that they have ever been held to alter the principles of humanity upon which it has insisted. Nothing but actual forcible resistance or continued efforts to escape by flight when ordered to stop for the purpose of visit on the part of the merchantman has ever been held to forfeit the lives of her passengers or crew. The government of the United States, however, does not understand that the imperial German government is seeking in this case to relieve itself of liability, but only intends to set forth the circumstances which led the commander of the submarine to allow himself to be hurried into the course which he took.

Your excellency's note, in discussing the loss of American lives resulting from the sinking of the steamship Lusitania, adverts at some length to certain information which the imperial German government has received with regard to the character and outfit of that vessel, and your excellency expresses the fear that this information may not have been brought to the attention of the government of the United States. It is stated in the note that the Lusitania was undoubtedly equipped with masked guns, supplied with trained gunners and special ammunition, transporting troops from Canada, carrying a cargo not permitted under the laws of the United States to a vessel also carrying passengers, and serving, in virtual effect, as an auxiliary to the naval forces of Great Britain. Fortunately these are matters concerning which the government of the United States is in a position to give the imperial German government official information. Of the facts alleged in your excellency's note, if true, the government of the United States would have been bound to take official cognizance in performing its recognized duty as a neutral power and in enforcing its national laws. It was its duty to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action, that she was not serving as a transport, that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States, and that, if in fact she was a naval vessel of Great Britain, she should not receive clearance as a merchantman, and if performed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure the imperial German government that it has been misinformed. If the imperial German government should deem itself to be in possession of convincing evidence that the officials of the government of the United States did not perform these duties with thoroughness the government of the United States sincerely hopes that it will submit that evidence for consideration.

Whatever may be the contentions of the imperial German government regarding the carriage of contraband of war on board the Lusitania regarding the explosion of that material by the torpedo, it need only be said that in the view of this government these contentions are irrelevant to the question of the legality of the methods used by the German naval authorities in sinking the vessel.

But the sinking of passenger ships involves principles of humanity which throw into the background any special circumstances of detail that may be thought to affect the cases, principles which lift it, as the imperial German government will no doubt be quick to recognize and acknowledge, out of the class of ordinary subjects of diplomatic discussion or of international controversy. Whatever be the other facts regarding the Lusitania, the principal fact is that a great steamer, primarily and chiefly a conveyance for passengers, and carrying more than a thousand souls who had no part or lot in the conduct of the war, was torpedoed and sunk without so much as a challenge or a warning, and that men, women and children were sent to their death in circumstances unparalleled in modern warfare. The fact that more than one hundred American citizens were among those who perished made it the duty of the government of the United States to speak of these things and once more, with solemn emphasis, to call the attention of the imperial German government to the grave responsibility which the government of the United States conceives that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence, and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests. The government of the United States is contending for something much greater than mere rights of property or privileges of commerce. It is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity, which every government honors itself in respecting and which no government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority. Only her actual resistance to capture or refusal to stop when ordered to do so for the purpose of visit could have afforded the commander of the submarine any justification for so much as putting the lives of those on board the ship in jeopardy. This principle the government of the United States understands the explicit instructions issued on Aug. 3, 1914, by the imperial German admiralty to its commanders at sea to have recognized and embodied, as do the naval codes of all other nations, and upon it every traveler and seaman had a right to depend. It is upon this principle of humanity as well as upon the law founded upon this principle that the United States must stand.

The government of the United States is happy to observe that your excellency's note closes with the intimation that the imperial German government is willing, now as before, to accept the good offices of the United States in an attempt to come to an understanding with the government of Great Britain by which the character and conditions of the war upon the sea may be changed. The government of the United States would consider it a privilege thus to serve its friends and the world. It stands ready at any time to convey to either government any intimation or suggestion the other may be willing to have it convey and cordially invites the imperial German government to make use of its services in this way at its convenience. The whole world is concerned in anything that may bring about even a partial accommodation of interests or in any way mitigate the terrors of the present distressing conflict.

In the meantime, whatever arrangement may happily be made between the parties to the war, and whatever may in the opinion of the imperial German government have been the provocation or the circumstantial justification for the past acts of its commanders at sea, the government of the United States confidently looks to see the justice and humanity of the government of Germany vindicated in all cases where Americans have been wronged or their rights as neutrals invaded.

The government of the United States therefore very earnestly and very solemnly renews the representations of its note transmitted to the imperial German government on the 15th of May, and relies in these representations upon the principles of humanity, the universally recognized understandings of international law and the ancient friendship of the German nation.

The government of the United States cannot admit that the proclamation of a war zone from which neutral ships have been warned to keep away be made to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights either of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality. It does not understand the imperial German government to question those rights. It understands it also to accept as established beyond question the principle that the lives of noncombatants cannot lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unresisting merchantman, and to recognize the obligation to take sufficient precaution to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag. The government of the United States therefore deems it reasonable to expect that the imperial German government will adopt the measures necessary to put these principles into practice in respect of the safeguarding of American lives and American ships, and asks for assurances that this will be done.

ROBERT LANSING,

Secretary of State ad Interim.

THE GERMAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO
THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.
(Translation.)

Foreign Office, Berlin, July 8, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated the 10th ultimo, foreign office No. 3514, on the subject of the impairment of American interests by the German submarine war.

The imperial government has learned with satisfaction from the note how earnestly the government of the United States is concerned in seeing the principles of humanity realized in the present war. Also, this appeal meets with full sympathy in Germany, and the imperial government is quite willing to permit its statements and decisions in the case under consideration to be governed by the principles of humanity just as it has done always.

The imperial government welcomed it with gratitude when the American government in its note of May 15, 1915, itself recalled that Germany had always permitted itself to be governed by the principles of progress and humanity in dealing with the law of maritime war. Since the time when Frederick the Great negotiated with John Adams, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson the treaty of friendship and commerce of Sept. 10, 1785, between Prussia and the republic of the west, German and American statesmen have in fact always stood together in the struggle for the freedom of the seas and for the protection of peaceable trade. In the international proceedings which have since been conducted for the regulation of the right of maritime war Germany and America have jointly advocated progressive principles, especially the abolishment of the right of capture at sea and the protection of the interests of neutrals. Even at the beginning of the present war the German government immediately declared its willingness, in response to the proposal of the American government, to ratify the declaration of London and thereby to subject itself, in the use of its naval forces, to all the restrictions provided therein in favor of neutrals. Germany has likewise been always tenacious of the principle that war should be conducted against the armed and organized forces of the enemy country, but that the civilian population of the enemy must be spared as far as possible from the measures of war. The imperial government cherishes the definite hope that some way will be found when peace is concluded, or perhaps earlier, to regulate the law of maritime war in a manner guaranteeing the freedom of the seas, and will welcome it with gratitude and satisfaction if it can work hand in hand with the American government on that occasion.

If in the present war the principles which should be the ideal of the future have been traversed more and more the longer its duration, the German government has no guilt therein.

It is known to the American government how Germany's adversaries, by completely paralyzing peaceable traffic between Germany and the neutral countries, have aimed from the very beginning, and with increasing lack of consideration, at the destruction not so much of the armed forces as the life of the German nation, repudiating in so doing all the rules of international law and disregarding all the rights of neutrals. On Nov. 3, 1914, England declared the North sea to be a war area, and by planting poorly anchored mines and the stoppage and capture of vessels made passage extremely dangerous and difficult for neutral shipping, so that it is actually blocking neutral coasts and ports, contrary to all international law. Long before the beginning of the submarine war England practically completely intercepted legitimate neutral navigation to Germany also. Thus Germany was driven to submarine war on trade. On Nov. 16, 1914, the English prime minister declared in the house of commons that it was one of England's principal tasks to prevent food for the German population from reaching Germany by way of neutral ports. Since March 1 of this year England has been taking from neutral ships without further formality all merchandise proceeding to Germany, as well as all merchandise coming from Germany, even when neutral property. Just as was the case with the Boers, the German people is now to be given the choice of perishing from starvation, with its women and children, or of relinquishing its independence.

While our enemies thus loudly and openly have proclaimed war without mercy until our utter destruction, we are conducting war in self-defense for our national existence and for the sake of peace of assured permanency. We have been obliged to adopt submarine warfare to meet the declared intentions of our enemies and the method of warfare adopted by them in contravention of international law.

With all its efforts in principle to protect neutral life and property from damage as much as possible, the German government recognized unreservedly in its memorandum of Feb. 4 that the interests of neutrals might suffer from submarine warfare. However, the American government will also understand and appreciate that in the fight for existence which has been forced upon Germany by its adversaries and announced by them, it is the sacred duty of the imperial government to do all within its power to protect and to save the lives of German subjects. If the imperial government were derelict in these, its duties, it would be guilty before God and history of the violation of those principles of the highest humanity which are the foundation of every national existence.

The case of the Lusitania shows with horrible clearness to what jeopardizing of human lives the manner of conducting war employed by our adversaries leads. In most direct contradiction of international law, all distinctions between merchantmen and war vessels have been obliterated by the order to British merchantmen to arm themselves and to ram submarines and the promise of rewards therefor, and neutrals who use merchantmen as travelers have thereby been exposed in an increasing degree to all the dangers of war. If the commander of the German submarine which destroyed the Lusitania had caused the crew and travelers to put out in boats before firing the torpedo this would have meant the sure destruction of his own vessel. After the experiences in the sinking of much smaller and less seaworthy vessels it was to be expected that a mighty ship like the Lusitania would remain above water long enough, even after the torpedoing, to permit the passengers to enter the ship's boats. Circumstances of a very peculiar kind, especially the presence on board of large quantities of highly explosive materials, defeated this expectation. In addition, it may be pointed out that if the Lusitania had been spared thousands of cases of ammunition would have been sent to Germany's enemies and thereby thousands of German mothers and children robbed of their supporters.

In the spirit of friendship with which the German nation has been imbued toward the union and its inhabitants since the earliest days of its existence, the imperial government will always be ready to do all it can, during the present war also, to prevent the jeopardizing of the lives of American citizens.

The imperial government therefore repeats the assurances that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping, and the lives of American citizens on neutral vessels shall not be placed in jeopardy.

In order to exclude any unforeseen dangers to American passenger steamers, made possible in view of the conduct of maritime war on the part of Germany's adversaries, the German submarines will be instructed to permit the free and safe passage of such passenger steamers when made recognizable by special markings and notified a reasonable time in advance. The imperial government, however, confidently hopes that the American government will assume the guarantee that these vessels have no contraband on board. The details of the arrangements for the unhampered passage of these vessels would have to be agreed upon by the naval authorities of both sides.

In order to furnish adequate facilities for travel across the Atlantic ocean for American citizens, the German government submits for consideration a proposal to increase the number of available steamers by installing in the passenger service a reasonable number of neutral steamers, the exact number to be agreed upon, under the American flag under the same conditions as the American steamers above mentioned.

The imperial government believes that it can assume that in this manner adequate facilities for travel across the Atlantic ocean can be afforded American citizens. There would therefore appear to be no compelling necessity for American citizens to travel to Europe in time of war on ships carrying an enemy flag. In particular the imperial government is unable to admit that American citizens can protect an enemy ship through the mere fact of their presence on board. Germany merely followed England's example when it declared part of the high seas an area of war. Consequently accidents suffered by neutrals on enemy ships in this area of war cannot well be judged differently from accidents to which neutrals are at all times exposed at the seat of war on land when they betake themselves into dangerous localities in spite of previous warning.

If, however, it should not be possible for the American government to acquire an adequate number of neutral passenger steamers, the imperial government is prepared to interpose no objections to the placing under the American flag by the American government of four enemy passenger steamers for the passenger traffic between America and England. The assurances of "free and safe" passage for American passenger steamers would then be extended to apply under the identical preconditions to these formerly hostile passenger ships.

The president of the United States has declared his readiness, in a way deserving of thanks, to communicate and suggest proposals to the government of Great Britain with particular reference to the alteration of maritime war. The imperial government will always be glad to make use of the good offices of the president and hopes that his efforts in the present case, as well as in the direction of the lofty ideal of the freedom of the sea, will lead to an understanding.

The undersigned requests the ambassador to bring the above to the knowledge of the American government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew to his excellency the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

VON JAGOW.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, July 21, 1915.

You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister for foreign affairs:

The note of the imperial German government dated the 8th of July, 1915, has received the careful consideration of the government of the United States, and it regrets to be obliged to say that it has found it very unsatisfactory, because it fails to meet the real differences between the two governments and indicates no way in which the accepted principles of law and humanity may be applied in the grave matter in controversy, but proposes, on the contrary, arrangements for a partial suspension of those principles which virtually set them aside.

The government of the United States notes with satisfaction that the imperial German government recognizes without reservation the validity of the principles insisted on in the several communications which this government has addressed to the imperial German government with regard to its announcement of a war zone and the use of submarines against merchantmen on the high seas—the principle that 'the high seas are free, that the character and cargo of a merchantman must first be ascertained before she can lawfully be seized or destroyed and that the lives of noncombatants may in no case be put in jeopardy unless the vessel resists or seeks to escape after being summoned to submit to examination; for a belligerent act of retaliation is per se an act beyond the law, and the defense of an act as retaliatory is an admission that it is illegal.

The government of the United States is, however, keenly disappointed to find that the imperial German government regards itself as in large degree exempt from the obligation to observe these principles, even where neutral vessels are concerned, by what it believes the policy and practice of the government of Great Britain to be in the present war with regard to neutral commerce. The imperial German government will readily understand that the government of the United States cannot discuss the policy of the government of Great Britain with regard to neutral trade except with that government itself, and that it must regard the conduct of other belligerent governments as irrelevant to any discussion with the imperial German government of what this government regards as grave and unjustifiable violations of the rights of American citizens by German naval commanders. Illegal and inhuman acts, however justifiable they may be thought to be against an enemy who is believed to have acted in contravention of law and humanity, are manifestly indefensible when they deprive neutrals of their acknowledged rights, particularly when they violate the right to life itself. If a belligerent cannot retaliate against an enemy without injuring the lives of neutrals as well as their property, humanity, as well as justice and a due regard for the dignity of neutral powers, should dictate that the practice be discontinued. If persisted in it would in such circumstances constitute an unpardonable offense against the sovereignty of the neutral nation affected. The government of the United States is not unmindful of the extraordinary conditions created by this war or of the radical alterations of circumstance and method of attack produced by the use of instrumentalities of naval warfare which the nations of the world cannot have had in view when the existing rules of international law were formulated, and it is ready to make every reasonable allowance for these novel and unexpected aspects of war at sea, but it cannot consent to abate any essential or fundamental right of its people because of a mere alteration of circumstance. The rights of neutrals in time of war are based upon principle, not upon expediency, and the principles are immutable. It is the duty and obligation of belligerents to find a way to adapt the new circumstances to them.

The events of the past two months have clearly indicated that it is possible and practicable to conduct such submarine operations as have characterized the activity of the imperial German navy within the so called war zone in substantial accord with the accepted practices of regulated warfare. The whole world has looked with interest and increasing satisfaction at the demonstration of that possibility by German naval commanders. It is manifestly possible, therefore, to lift the whole practice of submarine attack above the criticism which it has aroused and remove the chief causes of offense.

In view of the admission of illegality made by the imperial government when it pleaded the right of retaliation in defense of its acts, and in view of the manifest possibility of conforming to the established rules of naval warfare, the government of the United States cannot believe that the imperial government will longer refrain from disavowing the wanton act of its naval commander in sinking the Lusitania or from offering reparation for the American lives lost, so far as reparation can be made for a needless destruction of human life by an illegal act.

The government of the United States, while not indifferent to the friendly spirit in which it is made, cannot accept the suggestion of the imperial German government that certain vessels be designated and agreed upon which shall be free on the seas now illegally proscribed. The very agreement would, by implication, subject other vessels to illegal attack and would be a curtailment and therefore an abandonment of the principles for which this government contends and which in time of calmer counsels every nation would concede as of course.

The government of the United States and the imperial German government are contending for the same great object, have long stood together in urging the very principles upon which the government of the United States now so solemnly insists. They are both contending for the freedom of the seas. The government of the United States will continue to contend for that freedom, from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost. It invites the practical co-operation of the imperial German government at this time when co-operation may accomplish most and this great common object be most strikingly and effectively achieved.

The imperial German government expresses the hope that this object may be in some measure accomplished even before the present war ends.

It can be. The government of the United States not only feels obliged to insist upon it, by whomsoever violated or ignored, in the protection of its own citizens, but is also deeply interested in seeing it made practicable between the belligerents themselves, and holds itself ready at any time to act as the common friend who may be privileged to suggest a way.

In the meantime the very value which this government sets upon the long and unbroken friendship between the people and government of the United States and the people and government of the German nation impels it to press very solemnly upon the imperial German government the necessity for a scrupulous observance of neutral rights in this critical matter. Friendship itself prompts it to say to the imperial government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly.

LANSING.

AMBASSADOR VON BERNSTORFF TO SECRETARY LANSING.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 1.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: With reference to our conversation of this morning, I beg to inform you that my instructions concerning our answer to your last Lusitania note contain the following passage:

"Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety to the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance."

Although I know that you do not wish to discuss the Lusitania question till the Arabic incident has been definitely and satisfactorily settled, I desire to inform you of the above because this policy of my government was decided on before the Arabic incident occurred.

I have no objection to your making any use you may please of the above information.

I remain, my dear Mr. Lansing, very sincerely yours,

J. VON BERNSTORFF.

THE ARABIC CASE.

AMBASSADOR VON BERNSTORFF TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

The following statement concerning the German government's attitude in regard to the Arabic was given out by Count von Bernstorff Aug. 24 in New York, N. Y.:

The German ambassador received the following instructions from Berlin, which he communicated to the department of state:

So far no official information available concerning the sinking of the Arabic.

The German government trusts that the American government will not take a definite stand at hearing only the reports of one side, which, in the opinion of the imperial government, cannot correspond with the facts, but that a chance will be given to Germany to be heard equally.

Although the imperial government does not doubt the good faith of the witnesses whose statements are reported by the newspapers in Europe, it should be borne in mind that these statements are naturally made under excitement which might easily produce wrong impressions.

If Americans should actually have lost their lives, this would naturally be contrary to our intentions. The German government would deeply regret the fact, and begs to tender sincerest sympathies to the American government.

THE GERMAN SECRETARY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR IN BERLIN.

Germany's note to the United States bearing on the sinking of the White Star line steamer Arabic on Aug. 19, communicated to the American ambassador, James W. Gerard, for transmission to Washington, was in the form of a memorandum under date of Sept. 7, the text of which follows:

On Aug. 19 a German submarine stopped the English steamer Dunsley about sixteen nautical miles south of Kinsale and was on the point of sinking the prize by gunfire after the crew had left the vessel. At this moment the commander saw a large steamer making directly toward him. This steamer, as developed later, was the Arabic. She was recognized as an enemy vessel, as she did not fly any flag and bore no neutral markings.

When she approached she altered her original course, but then again pointed directly toward the submarine. From this the commander became convinced that the steamer had the intention of attacking and ramming him. In order to anticipate this attack he gave orders for the submarine to dive and fired a torpedo at the steamer. After firing, he convinced himself that the people on board were being rescued in fifteen boats.

According to his instructions the commander was not allowed to attack the Arabic without warning and without saving the lives unless the ship attempted to escape or offered resistance. He was forced, however, to conclude from the attendant circumstances that the Arabic planned a violent attack on the submarine.

This conclusion is all the more obvious as he had been fired upon at a great distance in the Irish sea on Aug. 14—that is, a few days before—by a large passenger steamer apparently belonging to the British Royal Mail Steam Packet company, which he had neither attacked nor stopped.

The German government most deeply regrets that lives were lost through the action of the commander. It particularly expresses this regret to the government of the United States on account of the death of American citizens.

The German government is unable, however, to acknowledge any obligation to grant indemnity in the matter, even if the commander should have been mistaken as to the aggressive intentions of the Arabic.

If it should prove to be the case that it is impossible for the German and American governments to reach a harmonious opinion on this point, the German government would be prepared to submit the difference of opinion, as being a question of international law, to The Hague tribunal for arbitration, pursuant to article 38 of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In so doing, it assumes that, as a matter of course, the arbitral decision shall not be admitted to have the importance of a general decision on the permissibility or the converse under international law of German submarine warfare.

AMBASSADOR VON BERNSTORFF TO AMERICAN SECRETARY OF STATE.

The following letter was received by Secretary Lansing Oct. 5:

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Prompted by the desire to reach a satisfactory agreement with regard to the Arabic incident, my government has given me the following instructions:

The order issued by his majesty the emperor to the commanders of the German submarines of which I notified you on a previous occasion has been made so stringent that the recurrence of incidents similar to the Arabic case is considered out of the question.

According to the report of Commander Schneider of the submarine which sank the Arabic and his affidavit, as well as those of his men, Commander Schneider was convinced that the Arabic intended to ram the submarine.

On the other hand the Imperial government does not doubt the good faith of the affidavit of the British officers of the Arabic, according to which the Arabic did not intend to ram the submarine. The attack of the submarine was undertaken against the instructions issued to the commander. The Imperial government regrets and disavows this act, and has notified Commander Schneider accordingly.

Under these circumstances my government is prepared to pay an indemnity for American lives which, to its deep regret, have been lost on the Arabic. I am authorized to negotiate with you about the amount of this indemnity.

I remain, my dear Lansing, yours very sincerely,
J. VON BERNSTORFF.

THE NEBRASKAN CASE.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Telegram—Paraphrase.)

American Embassy, Berlin, July 12, 1915.

Following memorandum just received from the foreign office:

Memorandum relative to the damaging of the American steamer Nebraskan by a German submarine:

The German government received from newspaper reports the intelligence that the American steamer Nebraskan had been damaged by a mine or torpedo on the southwest coast of Ireland. It therefore started a thorough investigation of the case without delay, and from the result of the investigation it has become convinced that the damage to the Nebraskan was caused by an attack by a submarine.

On the evening of May 25 last the submarine met a steamer bound westward without a flag and with no neutral markings on her freeboard about thirty-five nautical miles west of Fastnet Rock; no appliance of any kind for the illumination of the flag or markings was to be seen. In the twilight, which had already set in, the name of the steamer was not visible from the submarine. Since the commander of the submarine was obliged to assume, from his wide experience in the area of maritime war, that only English steamers, and no neutral steamers, traversed this war area without flag and markings, he attacked the vessel with a torpedo in the conviction that he had an enemy vessel before him. Some time after the shot the commander saw that the vessel had in the meantime hoisted the American flag. As a consequence he of course refrained from any further attack. Since the vessel remained afloat he had no occasion to concern himself further with the boats which had been launched.

It results from this, without a doubt, that attack on the steamer Nebraskan was not meant for the American flag; nor is it traceable to any fault on the part of the commander of the German submarine, but is to be considered an unfortunate accident. The German government expresses its regret at the occurrence to the government of the United States of America and declares its readiness to make compensation for the damage thereby sustained by American citizens.

As in the case of the steamer Gulfight, the German government begs to suggest that the American government submit to it a detailed statement of such damage or, if doubt might arise as to certain points, to designate an expert to fix the amount of compensation, acting in conjunction with a German expert. GERARD.

CASE OF THE WILLIAM P. FRYE.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.

(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, March 31, 1915.
You are instructed to present the following note to the German foreign office:

Under instructions from my government I have the honor to present a claim for $228,059.54, with interest from Jan. 28, 1915, against the German government on behalf of the owners and captain of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye for damages suffered by them on account of the destruction of that vessel on the high seas by the German armed cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich on Jan. 28, 1915.

The facts upon which this claim arises and by reason of which the German government is held responsible by the government of the United States for the attendant loss and damages are briefly as follows:

The William P. Frye, a steel sailing vessel of 3,374 tons gross tonnage, owned by American citizens and sailing under the United States flag and register, cleared from Seattle, Wash., Nov. 4, 1914, under charter to M. H. Houser of Portland, Ore., bound for Queenstown, Falmouth or Plymouth for orders, with a cargo consisting solely of 186,950 bushels of wheat owned by the aforesaid Houser and consigned "unto order or to its assigns," all of which appears from the ship's papers which were taken from the vessel at the time of her destruction by the commander of the German cruiser.

On Jan. 27, 1915, the Prinz Eitel Friedrich encountered the Frye on the high seas, compelled her to stop, and sent on board an armed boarding party, who took possession. After an examination of the ship's papers the commander of the cruiser directed that the cargo be thrown overboard, but subsequently decided to destroy the vessel, and on the following morning, by his order, the Frye was sunk.

The claim of the owners and captain consists of the following items:

Value of ship, equipment and outfit.....	$150,000.00
Actual freight as per freight list, 5034 1000-2240 tons at 32-6—$3,180-19-6 at $4.86	39,759.54
Traveling and other expenses of Capt. Kiehne and Arthur Sewall & Co., agents of ship, in connection with making affidavits, preparing and filing claim	500.00
Personal effects of Capt. H. H. Kiehne	300.00
Damages covering loss due to deprivation of use of ship.....	37,500.00

Total 228,059.54

By direction of my government, I have the honor to request that full reparation be made by the German government for the destruction of the William P. Frye by the German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich. BRYAN.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

American Embassy, Berlin, April 5, 1915.

The following is translation of the reply of the foreign office to my note of April 3:

German Foreign Office, Berlin, April 5, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to make reply to the note of his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador, the United States of America, dated the 3d instant, relative to claims for damages for the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

According to the reports which have reached the German government the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich stopped the William P. Frye on the high seas Jan. 27, 1915, and searched her. He found on board a cargo of wheat consigned to Queenstown, Falmouth or Plymouth to order. After he had first tried to remove the cargo from the William P. Frye he took the ship's papers and her crew on board and sank ship.

It results from these facts that the German commander acted quite in accordance with the principles of international law as laid down in the declaration of London and the German prize ordinance. The ports of Queenstown, Falmouth, and Plymouth, whither the ship visited was bound, are strongly fortified English coast places, which, moreover, serve as bases for the British naval forces. The cargo of wheat, being food or food-stuffs, was conditional contraband within the meaning of article 24, No. 1, of the declaration of London, and article 23, No. 1, of the German prize ordinance, and was therefore to be considered as destined for the armed forces of the enemy, pursuant to articles 33 and 34 of the declaration of London and articles 32 and 33 of the German prize ordinance, and to be treated as contraband pending proof of the contrary. This proof was certainly not capable of being adduced at the time of the visiting of the vessel, since the cargo papers read to order. This, however, furnished the conditions under which, pursuant to article 49 of the declaration of London and article 113 of the German prize ordinance, the sinking of the ship was permissible, since it was not possible for the auxiliary cruiser to take the prize into a German port without involving danger to its own security or the success of its operations. The duties devolving upon the cruiser before destruction of the ship, pursuant to article 50 of the declaration of London and article 116 of the German prize ordinance, were fulfilled by the cruiser, in that it took on board all the persons found on the sailing vessel, as well as the ship's papers.

The legality of the measures taken by the German commander is furthermore subject to examination by the German prize court pursuant to article 51 of the declaration of London and section 1, No. 2, of the German code of prize procedure. These prize proceedings will be instituted before the prize court at Hamburg as soon as the ship's papers are received and will comprise the settlement of questions whether the destruction of the cargo and the ship was necessary within the meaning of article 49 of the declaration of London; whether the property sunk was liable to capture; and whether, or to what extent, indemnity is to be awarded the owners. In the trial the owners of ship and cargo would be at liberty, pursuant to article 34, paragraph 3, of the declaration of London, to adduce proof that the cargo of wheat had an innocent destination and did not, therefore, have the character of contraband. If such proof is not adduced, the German government would not be liable for any compensation whatever, according to the general principles of international law.

However, the legal situation is somewhat different in the light of the special stipulations applicable to the relations between Germany and the United States since article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of friendship and commerce of July 11, 1799, taken in connection with article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of commerce and navigation of May 1, 1828, provides that contraband belonging to the subjects or citizens of either party cannot be confiscated by the other in any case, but only detained or used in consideration of payment of the full value of the same. On the ground of this treaty stipulation, which is a matter, of course, binding on the German prize court, the American owners of the ship and cargo would receive compensation even if the court should declare the cargo of wheat to be contraband. Nevertheless, the approaching prize proceedings are not rendered superfluous, since the competent prize court must examine into the legality of the capture and destruction and also pronounce upon the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his government, and avails himself, etc.

(Signed) JAGOW.
GERARD.

April 4, 1915.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.

Department of State, Washington, April 23, 1915.

You are instructed to present the following note to the German foreign office:

In reply to your excellency's note of the 5th instant, which the government of the United States understands admits the liability of the imperial German government for the damages resulting from the sinking of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich on Jan. 28 last, I have the honor to say, by direction of my government, that while the promptness with which the imperial German government has admitted its liability is highly appreciated, my government feels that it would be inappropriate in the circumstances of this case, and would involve unnecessary delay, to adopt the suggestion in your note that the legality of the capture and destruction, the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity should be submitted to a prize court.

Unquestionably the destruction of this vessel was a violation of the obligations imposed upon the imperial German government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia, and the United States government, by virtue of its treaty rights, has presented to the imperial German government a claim for indemnity on account of the resulting damages suffered by American citizens. The liability of the imperial German government and the standing of the claimants as American citizens and the amount of indemnity are all questions which lend themselves to diplomatic negotiation between the two governments, and happily the question of liability has already been settled in that way. The status of the claimants and the amount of the indemnity are the only questions remaining to be settled, and it is appropriate that they should be dealt with in the same way.

The government of the United States fully understands that, as stated in your excellency's note, the German government is liable under the treaty provisions above mentioned for the damages arising from the destruction of the cargo as well as from the destruction of the vessel. But it will be observed that the claim under discussion does not include damages for the destruction of the cargo, and the question of the value of the cargo therefore is not involved in the present discussion.

The government of the United States recognizes that the German government will wish to be satisfied as to the American ownership of the vessel and the amount of the damages sustained in consequence of her destruction.

These matters are readily ascertainable, and if the German government desires any further evidence in substantiation of the claim on these points in addition to that furnished by the ship's papers, which are already in the possession of the German government, any additional evidence found necessary will be produced. In that case, however, inasmuch as any evidence which the German government may wish to have produced is more accessible and can more conveniently be examined in the United States than elsewhere, on account of the presence there of the owners and captain of the William P. Frye and their documentary records, and other possible witnesses, the government of the United States ventures to suggest the advisability of transferring the negotiations for the settlement of these points to the imperial German embassy at Washington.

In view of the admission of liability by reason of specific treaty stipulations, it has become unnecessary to enter into a discussion of the meaning and effect of the declaration of London, which is given some prominence in your excellency's note of April 5, further than to say that, as the German government has already been advised, the government of the United States does not regard the declaration of London as in force.

BRYAN.

THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Berlin, June 7, 1915.

The following is the text of the reply of the German government in the Frye case:

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated April 30, 1915, on the subject of the sinking of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich:

The German government cannot admit that, as the American government assumes, the destruction of the sailing vessel mentioned constitutes a violation of the treaties concluded between Prussia and the United States at an earlier date and now applicable to the relations between the German empire and the United States or of the American rights derived therefrom. For these treaties did not have the intention of depriving one of the contracting parties engaged in war of the right of stopping the supply of contraband to his enemy when he recognizes the supply of such articles as detrimental to his military interests. On the contrary, article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of July 11, 1799, expressly reserves to the party at war the right to stop the carrying of contraband and to detain the contraband; it follows then that if it cannot be accomplished in any other way, the stopping of the supply may in the extreme case be effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it. As a matter of course, the obligation of the party at war to pay compensation to the interested persons of the neutral contracting party remains in force whatever be the manner of stopping the supply.

According to general principles of international law, any exercise of the right of control over the trade in contraband is subject to the decision of the prize courts, even though such right may be restricted by special treaties. At the beginning of the present war Germany, pursuant to these principles, established by law prize jurisdiction for cases of the kind under consideration. The case of the William P. Frye is likewise subject to the German prize jurisdiction, for the Prussian-American treaties mentioned contain no stipulation as to how the amount of the compensation provided by article 13 of the treaty cited is to be fixed. The German government, therefore, complies with its treaty obligations to a full extent when the prize courts instituted by it in accordance with international law proceed in pursuance of the treaty stipulations and thus award the American interested persons equitable indemnity. There would, therefore, be no foundation for a claim of the American government, unless the prize courts should not grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty; in such an event, however, the German government would not hesitate to arrange for equitable indemnity notwithstanding. For the rest, prize proceedings in the case of the Frye are indispensable, apart from the American claims, for the reason that other claims of neutral and enemy interested parties are to be considered in the matter.

As was stated in the note of April 4 last, the prize court will have to decide the questions whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal; whether and under what conditions the property sunk was liable to confiscation, and to whom and in what amount indemnity is to be paid provided application therefor is received. Since the decision of the prize court must first be awaited before any further position is taken by the German government, the simplest way for the American interested parties to settle their claims would be to enter them in the competent quarter in accordance with the provisions of the German code of prize procedure.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his government, and avails himself at the same time of the opportunity to renew the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

(Signed) V. JAGOW.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT BERLIN.

(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, June 24, 1915.

You are instructed to present the following note to the German minister of foreign affairs:

I have the honor to inform your excellency that I duly communicated to my government your note of the 7th instant on the subject of the claim presented in my note of April 3d last, on behalf of the owners and captain of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye in consequence of her destruction by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

In reply I am instructed by my government to say that it has carefully considered the reasons given by the imperial German government for urging that this claim should be passed upon by the German prize court instead of being settled by direct diplomatic discussion between the two governments, as proposed by the government of the United States, and that it regrets to find that it cannot concur in the conclusions reached by the imperial German government.

As pointed out in my last note to you on this subject, dated April 30, the government of the United States has considered that the only question under discussion was the method which should be adopted for ascertaining the amount of the indemnity to be paid under an admitted liability, and it notes with surprise that in addition to this question the imperial German government now desires to raise some questions as to the meaning and effect of the treaty stipulations under which it has admitted its liability.

If the government of the United States correctly understands the position of the imperial German government as now presented, it is that the provisions of article 13 of the treaty of 1799 between the United States and Prussia, which is continued in force by the treaty of 1828, justified the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich in sinking the William P. Frye, although making the imperial German government liable for the damages suffered in consequence, and that inasmuch as the treaty provides no specific method for ascertaining the amount of indemnity to be paid, that question must be submitted to the German prize court for determination.

The government of the United States, on the other hand, does not find in the treaty stipulations mentioned any justification for the sinking of the Frye, and does not consider that the German prize court has any jurisdiction over the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid by the imperial German government on account of its admitted liability for the destruction of an American vessel on the high seas.

You state in your note of the 7th instant that article 13 of the above mentioned treaty of 1799 "expressly reserves to the party at war the right to stop the carrying of contraband and to detain the contraband; it follows then that if it cannot be accomplished in any other way, the stopping of the supply may in the extreme case be effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it."

The government of the United States cannot concur in this conclusion. On the contrary, it holds that these treaty provisions do not authorize the destruction of a neutral vessel in any circumstances. By its express terms the treaty prohibits even the detention of a neutral vessel carrying contraband if the master of the vessel is willing to surrender the contraband. Article 13 provides: "In the case supposed of a vessel stopped for articles of contraband, if the master of the vessel stopped will deliver out the goods supposed to be of contraband nature, he shall be admitted to do it, and the vessel shall not in that case be carried into any port, nor further detained, but shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage."

In this case the admitted facts show that pursuant to orders from the commander of the German cruiser, the master of the Frye undertook to throw overboard the cargo of that vessel, but that before the work of delivering out the cargo was finished the vessel with the cargo was sunk by order of the German commander.

For these reasons, even if it be assumed, as your excellency has done, that the cargo was contraband, your contention that the destruction of the vessel was justified by the provisions of article 13 does not seem to be well founded. The government of the United States has not thought it necessary in the discussion of this case to go into the question of the contraband or noncontraband character of the cargo. The imperial German government has admitted that this question makes no difference so far as its liability for damages is concerned, and the result is the same so far as the justification for the sinking of the vessel is concerned. As shown above, if we assume that the cargo was contraband, the master of the Frye should have been allowed to deliver it out, and the vessel should have been allowed to proceed on her voyage.

On the other hand, if we assume that the cargo was noncontraband, the destruction either of the cargo or the vessel could not be justified in the circumstances of this case under any accepted rule of international law. Attention is also called to the provisions of article 12 of the treaty of 1785 between the United States and Prussia, which, like article 13 of the treaty of 1799, was continued in force by article 12 of the treaty of 1828. So far as the provisions of article 12 of the treaty of 1785 apply to the question under consideration, they are as follows:

"If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neuter with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case, as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, inasmuch that all things shall be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other."

It seems clear to the government of the United States, therefore, that whether the cargo of the Frye is regarded as contraband or as noncontraband, the destruction of the vessel was, as stated in my previous communication on this subject, "a violation of the obligations imposed upon the imperial German government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia."

For these reasons the government of the United States must disagree with the contention which it understands is now made by the imperial German government that an American vessel carrying contraband may be destroyed without liability or accountability beyond the payment of such compensation for damages as may be fixed by a German prize court. The issue thus presented arises on a disputed interpretation of treaty provisions, the settlement of which requires direct diplomatic discussion between the two governments, and cannot properly be based upon the decision of the German prize court, which is in no way conclusive or binding upon the government of the United States.

Moreover, even if no disputed question of treaty interpretation was involved, the admission by the imperial German government of its liability for damages for sinking the vessel would seem to make it unnecessary, so far as this claim is concerned, to ask the prize court to decide "whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal, and whether and under what conditions the property sunk was liable to confiscation," which you state in your note dated June 7 are questions which should be decided by the prize court. In so far as these questions relate to the cargo, they are outside of the present discussion, because, as pointed out in my previous note to you on the subject dated April 30, "the claim under discussion does not include damages for the destruction of the cargo."

The real question between the two governments is what reparation must be made for a breach of treaty obligations, and that is not a question which falls within the jurisdiction of a prize court.

In my first note on the subject the government of the United States requested that "full reparation be made by the imperial German government for the destruction of the William P. Frye." Reparation necessarily includes an indemnity for the actual pecuniary loss sustained, and the government of the United States takes this opportunity to assure the imperial German government that such an indemnity, if promptly paid, will be accepted as satisfactory reparation, but it does not rest with a prize court to determine what reparation should be made or what reparation would be satisfactory to the government of the United States.

Your excellency states in your note of June 7 that in the event the prize court should not grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty requirements, the German government would not hesitate to arrange for equitable indemnity, but it is also necessary that the government of the United States should be satisfied with the amount of the indemnity, and it would seem to be more appropriate and convenient that an arrangement for equitable indemnity should be agreed upon now rather than later. The decision of the prize court, even on the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid, would not be binding or conclusive on the government of the United States.

The government of the United States also dissents from the view expressed in your note that "there would be no foundation for a claim of the American government unless the prize courts should not grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty." The claim presented by the American government is for an indemnity for a violation of a treaty, in distinction from an indemnity in accordance with the treaty, and therefore is a matter for adjustment by direct diplomatic discussion between the two governments, and is in no way dependent upon the action of a German prize court.

For the reasons above stated, the government of the United States cannot recognize the propriety of submitting the claim presented by it on behalf of the owners and captain of the Frye to the German prize court for settlement.

The government of the United States is not concerned with any proceedings which the imperial German government may wish to take on "other claims of neutral and enemy interested parties," which have not been presented by the government of the United States, but which you state in your note of June 7 make prize court proceedings in this case indispensable, and it does not perceive the necessity for postponing the settlement of the present claim pending the consideration of those other claims by the prize court.

The government of the United States therefore suggests that the imperial German government reconsider the subject in the light of these considerations, and, because of the objections against resorting to the prize court, the government of the United States renews its former suggestion that an effort be made to settle this claim by direct diplomatic negotiations.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, Berlin, July 30, 1915.

Foreign Office, Berlin, July 30, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of the 26th ultimo on the subject of the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prince Eitel Friedrich, that the points of view brought out in the note have been carefully examined by the imperial German government. This examination has led to the following conclusions:

The government of the United States believes that it is incumbent upon it to take the position that the treaty rights to which America is entitled, as contained in article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of Sept. 10, 1785, in article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of July 11, 1799, were violated by the sinking of the William P. Frye. It interprets these articles as meaning that a merchantman of the neutral contracting party carrying contraband cannot in any circumstances be destroyed by a warship of the belligerent contracting party, and that the sinking of the William P. Frye was, therefore, in violation of the treaty, even if her cargo should have consisted of contraband, which it leaves outside of the discussion.

The German government cannot accept this view. It insists as heretofore that the commander of the German auxiliary cruiser acted in the legal exercise of the right of control of trade in contraband enjoyed by warships of belligerent nations, and that the treaty stipulations mentioned merely oblige the German government to make compensation for the damage sustained by the American citizens concerned.

It is not disputed by the American government that according to general principles of international law a belligerent is authorized in sinking neutral vessels under almost any conditions for carrying contraband. As is well known, these principles were laid down in articles 49 and 50 of the declaration of London, and were recognized at that time by the duly empowered delegates of all the nations which participated in the conference, including the American delegates, to be declarative of existing international law (see preliminary clause of the declaration of London); moreover, at the beginning of the present war, the American government proposed to the belligerent nations to ratify the declaration of London and give its provisions formal validity also.

The German government has already explained in its note of April 4 last for what reasons it considers that the conditions justifying the sinking under international law were present in the case of the William P. Frye. The cargo consisted of conditional contraband, the destination of which for the hostile armed forces was to be presumed under the circumstances; no proof to overcome this presumption has been furnished. More than half the cargo of the vessel was contraband, so that the vessel was liable to confiscation. The attempt to bring the American vessel into a German port would have greatly imperiled the German vessel in the given situation of the war, and at any rate practically defeated the success of her further operations. Thus the authority for sinking the vessel was given according to general principles of international law.

There only remains then to be examined the question how far the Prussian-American treaty stipulations modify these principles of international law.

In this connection article 12 of the treaty of 1785 provides that in the event of a war between one of the contracting parties with another power the free commerce and intercourse of the nationals of the party remaining neutral with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted, but that on the contrary the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports of the belligerent powers, even neutralizing enemy goods on board thereof. However, this article merely formulates general rules for the freedom of maritime intercourse and leaves the question of contraband untouched; the specific stipulations on this point are contained in the following article, which is materially identical with article 13 of the treaty of 1799 now in force.

The plain intention of article 13 is to establish a reasonable compromise between the military interests of the belligerent contracting party and the commercial interests of the neutral party. On the one hand the belligerent party is to have the right to prevent the transportation of war supplies to his adversaries even when carried on vessels of the neutral party; on the other hand, the commerce and navigation of the neutral party is to be interfered with as little as possible by the measures necessary for such prevention, and reasonable compensation is to be paid for any inconvenience or damage which may nevertheless ensue from the proceeding of the belligerent party.

Article 13 recites the following means whereby the belligerent party can prevent the vessels of the neutral party from carrying war supplies to his adversary. The detention of the ship and cargo for such length of time as the belligerent may think necessary; furthermore, the taking over of the war stores for his own use, paying the full value of the same as ascertained at the place of destination. The right of sinking is not mentioned in the treaty and is therefore neither expressly permitted nor expressly prohibited, so that on this point the party stipulations must be supplemented by the general rules of international law. From the meaning and spirit of the treaty it really appears out of the question that it was intended to expect of the belligerent that he should permit a vessel loaded with contraband, for example a shipment of arms and ammunition of decisive importance for the outcome of the war, to proceed unhindered to his enemy when circumstances forbid the carrying of the (* * *) into port, if the general rules of international law allow sinking of the vessel.

The remaining stipulations of article 13 must likewise be considered in this light: they provide that the captain of a vessel stopped shall be allowed to proceed on his voyage if he delivers out the contraband to the warship which stopped his vessel. For such delivering out cannot, of course, be considered when the ensuing loss of time imperils either the warship herself or the success of her other operations. In the case of the William P. Frye the German commander at first tried to have matters settled by the delivery of contraband, but convinced himself of the impracticability of this attempt in that it would expose his ship to attack by whatever superior force of enemy war vessels pursuing him, and was accordingly obliged to determine upon the sinking of the Frye. Thus, he did not exceed on this point the limits to which he was bound by article 13.

However, article 13 asserts itself here to the extent that it founds the obligation to compensate the American citizens affected, whereas, according to the general rules of international law, the belligerent party does not need to grant compensation for a vessel lawfully sunk. For, if by article 13, the mere exercise of the right of highways makes the belligerent liable for compensation, this must apply a fortiori to the exercise of the right of sinking.

The question whether the German commander acted legally was primarily a subject for the consideration of the German prize courts, according to general principles of international law as laid down, also in article 1 of The Hague convention for the establishment of an international prize court and in article 51 of the declaration of London. The German government consequently laid the case of William P. Frye before the competent prize court at Hamburg, as was stated in its note of the 7th ultimo. This court found by its judgment of the 10th instant that the cargo of the American vessel William P. Frye was contraband, that the vessel could not be carried into port, and that the sinking was therefore justified; at the same time the court expressly recognized the validity of the Prussian-American treaty stipulations severally (* * *) model for the relations between the German empire and America, so that the sinking of the ship and cargo, so far as American property, makes the German empire liable for indemnity. The prize court was unable to fix the indemnity itself, since it had no data before it, failing the receipt of the necessary details from the parties interested.

It will now be necessary to settle these points in a different way. The German government suggests as the simplest way that each of the two governments designate an expert, and that the two experts jointly fix the amount of indemnity for the vessel and any American property which may have been sunk with her. The German government will promptly pay the amount of indemnity thus ascertained; it expressly declares, however, reverting to what has been stated above, that this payment does not constitute satisfaction for the violation of American treaty rights, but a duty or policy of this government founded on the existing treaty stipulations.

Should the American government not agree to this manner of settling the matter, the German government is prepared to submit the difference of opinion as being a question of the interpretation of the existing treaties between Germany and the United States to the tribunal at The Hague, pursuant to article 38 of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the attention of his government and avails himself, etc.

*Omission.

(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Aug. 10, 1915.

You are instructed to present the following note to the German minister for foreign affairs:

Under instructions from my government, I have the honor to inform your excellency, in reply to your note of July 30 in regard to the claim for reparation for the sinking of the William P. Frye, that the government of the United States learns with regret that the objections urged by it against the submission of this case to the prize court for decision have not commended themselves to the imperial German government, and it equally regrets that the reasons presented by the imperial German government for submitting this case to the prize court have failed to remove the objections of the government of the United States to the adoption of that course. As this disagreement has been reached after the full presentation of the views of both governments in our previous correspondence, a further exchange of views on the questions in dispute would doubtless be unprofitable, and the government of the United States therefore welcomes your excellency's suggestion that some other way should be found for settling this case.

The two methods of settlement proposed as alternative suggestions in your excellency's note have been given careful consideration, and it is believed that if they can be combined so that they may both be adopted, they will furnish a satisfactory basis for the solution of the question at issue.

The government of the United States has already expressed its desire that the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid by the imperial German government under its admitted liability for the losses of the owners and captain on account of the destruction of the Frye should be settled by diplomatic negotiation, and it entirely concurs with the suggestion of the imperial German government that the simplest way would be to agree, as proposed in your note, "that each of the two governments designate an expert and that the two experts jointly fix the amount of indemnity for the vessel and any American property which may have been sunk with her," to be paid by the imperial German government when ascertained as stated in your note. It is assumed that the arrangement will include some provision for calling in an umpire in case the experts fail to agree.

The government of the United States notes that your suggestion is made with the express reservation that a payment under this arrangement would not constitute an admission that American treaty rights had been violated, but would be regarded by the imperial German government merely as fulfilling a duty or policy founded on existing treaty stipulations. A payment made on this understanding would be entirely acceptable to the government of the United States, provided that the acceptance of such payment should likewise be understood to be without prejudice to the contention of the government of the United States that the sinking of the Frye was without legal justification, and provided also that an arrangement can be agreed upon for the immediate submission to arbitration of the question of legal justification in so far as it involves the interpretation of existing treaty stipulations.

There can be no difference of opinion between the two governments as to the desirability of having this question of the true intent and meaning of their treaty stipulations determined without delay, and to that end the government of the United States proposes that the alternative suggestion of the imperial German government also be adopted, so that this question of treaty interpretation can be submitted forthwith to arbitration pursuant to article 38 of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In this way both the question of indemnity and the question of treaty interpretation can promptly be settled, and it will be observed that the only change made in the plan proposed by the imperial German government is that instead of eliminating either one of its alternative suggestions, they are both given effect in order that both of the questions under discussion may be dealt with at the same time.

If this proposal proves acceptable to the imperial German government, it will be necessary also to determine whether, pending the arbitral award, the imperial German government shall govern its naval operations in accordance with its own interpretation, or in accordance with the interpretation maintained by the United States, as to the obligations imposed by their treaty stipulations, and the government of the United States would be glad to have an expression of the views of the imperial German government on this point.

AMBASSADOR GERARD TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Berlin, Sept. 19, 1915.

Following note received from the foreign office to-day:

Foreign Office, Berlin, Sept. 19.

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated 13th ultimo, on the subject of the claim for reparation for the sinking of the American merchantman William P. Frye.

With regard first to the ascertainment of the damage by experts the German government believes that it should dispense with the nomination of an umpire. In the cases of the ascertainment of damages hitherto arranged between the German government and a neutral government from similar causes the experts named by the two parties have always reached an agreement as to the amount of the damage without difficulty; should it not be possible, however, to reach an agreement on some point it could probably be settled by diplomatic negotiation. Assuming that the American government agrees to this, the German government names as its expert Dr. Kerpny of Bremen, director of the North German Lloyds; it begs to await the designation of the American expert.

The German government declares that it agrees with the proposal of the American government to separate the question of indemnity from the question of interpretation of the Prussian-American treaties of 1785, 1799 and 1828. It, therefore, again expressly states that in making payment it does not acknowledge the violation of the treaty, as contended by the American side, but it will admit that the settlement of the question of indemnity does not prejudice the arrangement of the difference of opinion concerning the interpretation of the treaty rights, and that this dispute is left to be decided by The Hague tribunal of arbitration.

The negotiations relative to the signing of the compromise provided by article 52 of The Hague arbitration convention would best be conducted between the foreign office and the American embassy in Berlin in view of the difficulties in the way of instructing the imperial ambassador in Washington. In case the American government agrees the foreign office is prepared to submit to the embassy a draft of such a compromise.

The American government's inquiry whether the German government will govern its naval operations in accordance with the German or the American interpretation of the treaty stipulations in question, pending the arbitral proceedings, has been carefully considered by the German government. From the standpoint of law and equity it is not prevented, in its opinion, from proceeding against American ships carrying contraband, according to its interpretation, until the question is settled by arbitration. For the German government does not need to depart from the application of generally recognized rules of the law of maritime war, as the declaration of London, unless and in so far as an exception based on a treaty is established beyond all doubt. In the case of the present difference of opinion between the German and the American governments such an exception could not be taken to be established except on the ground of the arbitral award. Moreover, the disadvantages to Germany which would ensue from the American interpretation of the treaty stipulations would be so much greater as to be out of proportion to those which the German interpretation would entail for the United States. For whereas the American interpretation would materially impede Germany in her conduct of warfare, hardly any particular disadvantage to American citizens would result from the German interpretation, since they receive full reparation for any property damage sustained.

Nevertheless, the German government, in order to furnish to the American government evidence of its conciliatory attitude, has issued orders to the German naval forces not to destroy American merchantmen which have loaded conditional contraband even when the conditions of international law are present, but to permit them to continue their voyage unhindered if it is not possible to take them into port. On the other hand, it must reserve to itself the right to destroy vessels carrying absolute contraband wherever such destruction is permissible according to the provisions of the declaration of London.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his government, and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, etc.

VON JAGOW.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR GERARD.

Department of State, Washington, Oct. 12, 1915.

You are instructed to present the following note to the German minister of foreign affairs:

In reply to your excellency's note of Sept. 19 on the subject of claim for damages for the sinking of the American merchantman William P. Frye, I am instructed by the government of the United States to say that it notes with satisfaction the willingness of the imperial German government to settle the questions at issue in this case by referring to a joint commission of experts the amount of the indemnity to be paid by the imperial German government under its admitted liability for the losses of the owners and captain on account of the destruction of the vessel, and by referring to arbitration the question of the interpretation of treaty rights.

The government of the United States further notes that in agreeing to this arrangement the imperial German government expressly states that in making payment it does not acknowledge the violation of the treaty, as contended by the government of the United States, and that the settlement of the question of indemnity does not prejudice the arrangement of the differences of opinion between the two governments concerning the interpretation of the treaty rights. The government of the United States understands that this arrangement will also be without prejudice to its own contention in accordance with the statements of its position in its note of Aug. 10 last to your excellency on this subject, and the government of the United States agrees to this arrangement on that understanding. Your excellency states that the imperial German government believes that the nomination of an umpire should be dispensed with, because it has been the experience of the imperial German government that the experts named in such cases have always reached an agreement without difficulty, and that should they disagree on some point it could probably be settled by diplomatic negotiation.

The government of the United States entirely concurs in the view that it is not necessary to nominate an umpire in advance. It is not to be assumed that the experts will be unable to agree or that if they are the point in dispute cannot be settled by diplomatic negotiation, but the government of the United States believes that in agreeing to this arrangement it should be understood in advance that in case the amount of indemnity is not settled by the joint commission of experts or by diplomatic negotiation the question will then be referred to an umpire if that is desired by the government of the United States.

Assuming that this understanding is acceptable to the German government, it will only remain for the government of the United States to nominate its expert to act with the expert already nominated by the German government on the joint commission. It seems desirable to the government of the United States that this joint commission of experts should meet without delay as soon as the American member is named and that its meetings should be held in the United States, because, as pointed out in my note to you of April 30 last, any evidence which the German government may wish to have produced is more accessible and can more conveniently be examined there than elsewhere.

With reference to the agreement to submit to arbitration the question of treaty interpretation, the government of the United States notes that in answer to its inquiry whether, pending the arbitral proceedings, the German government will govern its naval operations in accordance with the German or American interpretation of the treaty stipulations in question, the reply of the German government is that "it has issued orders to the German naval forces not to destroy American merchantmen which have loaded conditional contraband even when the conditions of international law are present, but to permit them to continue their voyage unhindered if it is not possible to take them into port," and that "on the other hand it must reserve to itself the right to destroy vessels carrying absolute contraband whenever such destruction is permissible according to the provisions of the declaration on London."

Without admitting that the declaration of London is in force, and on the understanding that the requirements in article 50 of the declaration that "before the vessel is destroyed all persons on board must be placed in safety" is not satisfied by merely giving them an opportunity to escape in lifeboats, the government of the United States is willing, pending the arbitral award in this case, to accept the declaration of London as the rule governing the conduct of the German government in relation to the treatment of American vessels carrying cargoes of absolute contraband. On this understanding the government of the United States agrees to refer to arbitration this question of treaty interpretation.

The government of the United States concurs in the desire of the imperial German government that the negotiations relative to the signing of the compromise referring this question of treaty interpretation to arbitration under the provisions of article 52 of The Hague arbitration convention, should be conducted between the German foreign office and the American embassy in Berlin, and the government of the United States will be glad to recognize the draft compromise which you inform me the foreign office is prepared to submit to the American ambassador in Berlin.

Anticipating that it may be convenient for the imperial German government to know in advance of these negotiations the preference of the government of the United States as to the form of arbitration to be arranged for in the compromise, my government desires me to say that it would prefer, if agreeable to the imperial government, that the arbitration should be by summary procedure, based upon the provisions of articles 86 to 90, inclusive, of The Hague arbitration convention rather than the longer form of arbitration before the permanent court at The Hague.

Arrange for simultaneous publication of this note at earliest date which will give you time to notify the department. LANSING.

CASE OF THE WILHELMINA.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE.

Department of State, Washington, Feb. 15, 1915.

The department notes that you have been informed by the British government that the cargo of the American steamer Wilhelmina has been sent to prize court, but is not yet unloaded. The government of the United States, of course, has no intention of interfering with the proper course of judicial procedure in the British prize courts, but deems it proper to bring to the attention of the British government information which has been received in relation to the character and destination of the cargo and to point out certain considerations prompting the supposition that the seizure may not be justified.

This government is informed that the W. L. Green Commission company, an American corporation organized in 1891, which in the past has made extensive shipments of goods to Germany, is the sole owner of the cargo, which consists entirely of foodstuffs consigned to the W. L. Green Commission company, Hamburg, and that the company's manager, now in Europe, has instructions to sell the cargo solely to the civilian population of Hamburg. A copy of the ship's manifest has been submitted to this government, accompanied by a sworn statement from the company's manager in which he represents that he was instructed to proceed to Germany to dispose of the cargo to private purchasers in that country, and not to any belligerent government nor armed forces of such government, nor to any agent of a belligerent government or of its armed forces.

According to well-established practice among nations, admitted, as this government understands, by the government of Great Britain, the articles of which the Wilhelmina's cargo is said to consist are subject to seizure as contraband only in case they are destined for the use of a belligerent government or its armed forces. The government of the United States understands that the British authorities consider the seizure of the cargo justified on the ground that a recent order of the federal council of Germany, promulgated after the vessel sailed, required the delivery of imported articles to the German government. The owners of the cargo have represented to this government that such a position is untenable. They point out that, by a provision of the order in question as originally announced, the regulations in relation to the seizure of food products are made inapplicable to such products imported after Jan. 31, 1915. They further represent that the only articles shipped on the Wilhelmina which are embraced within the terms of these regulations are wheat and bran, which constitute about 15 per centum of the cargo as compared with 85 per centum consisting of meats, vegetables and fruits. The owners also assert that the regulations contemplate the disposition of foodstuffs to individuals through municipalities; that municipalities are not agents of the government, and that the purpose of the regulations is to conserve the supply of food products and to prevent speculation and inflation of prices to non-combatants.

The German government has addressed a formal communication to the government of the United States in relation to the effect of the decree issued by the German federal council, and this government deems it pertinent to call to the attention of the British government a material portion of this communication, which is as follows:

"1. The federal council's decision concerning the seizure of food products, which England alleges to be the cause of food products shipped to Germany being treated as contraband, bears exclusively on wheat, rye, both unmixed and mixed with other products, and also wheat, rye, oats, and barley flour.

"2. The federal council makes an express exception in section 45 of the order. Section 45 provides as follows: The stipulations of this regulation do not apply to grain or flour imported from abroad after Jan. 31.

"3. Conjointly with that saving clause the federal council's order contains a provision under which imported cereals and flours would be sold exclusively to the municipalities or certain specially designated organizations by the importers. Although that provision had for its object simply to throw imported grain and flours into such channels as supply the private consumption of civilians and, in consequence of that provision, the intent and purpose of the federal council's order, which was to protect the civilian population from speculators and engrossers, were fully met, it was nevertheless rescinded so as to leave no room for doubt.

"4. My government is amenable to any proposition looking to control by a special American organization under the supervision of the American consular officers and, if necessary, will itself make a proposition in that direction.

"5. The German government further calls attention to the fact that municipalities do not form part of or belong to the government, but are self administrative bodies, which are elected by the inhabitants of the commune in accordance with fixed rules and therefore exclusively represent the private part of the population and act as it directs. Although those principles are generally known and obtain in the United States as well as in England itself, the German government desired to point out the fact so as to avoid any further unnecessary delay.

"6. Hence it is absolutely assured that imported food products will be consumed by the civilian population in Germany exclusively."

It will be observed that it is stated in this communication, which appears to confirm the contention of the cargo owners, that a part of the order of the German federal council relating to imported food products has now been rescinded.

This government has received another communication from the German government giving formal assurance to the government of the United States that all goods imported into Germany from the United States, directly or indirectly, which belong to the class of relative contraband, such as foodstuffs, will not be used by the German army or navy or by government authorities, but will be left to the free consumption of the German civilian population, excluding all government purveyors.

If the British authorities have not in their possession evidence other than that presented to this government as to the character and destination of the cargo of the Wilhelmina sufficient to warrant the seizure of this cargo, the government of the United States hopes that the British government will release the vessel together with her cargo and allow her to proceed to her port of destination.

Please communicate with the British government in the sense of the foregoing. BRYAN.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
[Telegram.]

American Embassy, London, Feb. 19, 1915.

Sir Edward Grey has just handed me the following memorandum. Since your telegram to him was given to the press in Washington I consented to his proposal to give this memorandum out for publication in Saturday morning's newspapers: Memorandum.

The communication made by the United States ambassador in his note to Sir Edward Grey of the 16th instant has been carefully considered and the following observations are offered in reply:

2. At the time when his majesty's government gave directions for the seizure of the cargo of the steamship Wilhelmina as contraband they had before them the text of the decree made by the German federal council on the 25th January, under article 45 of which all grain and flour imported into Germany after the 31st January was declared deliverable only to certain organizations under direct government control or to municipal authorities. The vessel was bound for Hamburg, one of the free cities of the German empire, the government of which is vested in the municipality. This was one of the reasons actuating his majesty's government in deciding to bring the cargo of the Wilhelmina before the prize court.

3. Information has only now reached them that by a subsequent decree, dated the 6th February, the above provision in article 45 of the previous decree was repealed, it would appear for the express purpose of rendering difficult the anticipated proceedings against the Wilhelmina. The repeal was not known to his majesty's government at the time of detention of the cargo, or, indeed, until now.

4. How far the ostensible exception of imported supplies from the general government monopoly of all grain and flour set up by the German government may affect the question of the contraband nature of the shipment seized is a matter which will most suitably be investigated by the prize court.

5. It is, however, necessary to state that the German decree is not the only ground on which the submission of the cargo of the Wilhelmina to a prize court is justified. The German government have in public announcements claimed to treat practically every town or port on the English east coast as a fortified place and base of operations. On the strength of this contention they have subjected to bombardment the open towns of Yarmouth, Scarborough and Whitby among others. On the same ground a number of neutral vessels sailing for English ports on the east coast with cargoes of goods on the German list of conditional contraband have been seized by German cruisers and brought before the German prize court. Again, the Dutch vessel Maria, having sailed from California with a cargo of grain consigned to Dublin and Belfast, was sunk in September last by the German cruiser Karlshöhe. This could only have been justified if, among other things, the cargo could have been proved to be destined for the British government or armed forces and if a presumption to this effect had been established owing to Dublin or Belfast being considered a fortified place or a base for the armed forces.

6. The German government cannot have it both ways. If they consider themselves justified in destroying by bombardment the lives and property of peaceful civil inhabitants of English open towns and watering places, and in seizing and sinking ships and cargoes of conditional contraband on the way thither on the ground that they were consigned to a fortified place or base, "a fortiori" his majesty's government must be at liberty to treat Hamburg, which is in part protected by the fortifications at the mouth of the Elbe, as a fortified town and a base of operations and supply for the purposes of article 34 of the declaration of London. If the owners of the cargo of the Wilhelmina desire to question the validity in international law of the action taken by order of his majesty's government they will have every opportunity of establishing their case in due course before the prize court, and his majesty's government would, in this connection, recall the attention of the United States government to the considerations put forward in Sir Edward Grey's note to Mr. Page of the 10th instant as to the propriety of awaiting the result of prize court proceedings before diplomatic action is initiated. It will be remembered that they have from the outset given a definite assurance that the owners of the Wilhelmina, as well as the owners of her cargo, if found to be contraband, would be equitably indemnified.

7. There is one further observation to which his majesty's government think it right and appropriate in the present connection to give expression. They have not so far declared foodstuffs to be absolute contraband. They have not interfered with any neutral vessels on account of their carrying foodstuffs, except on the basis of such foodstuffs being liable to capture if destined for the enemy forces or governments. In so acting they have been guided by the general principle, of late universally upheld by civilized nations and observed in practice, that the civil populations of countries at war are not to be exposed to the treatment rightly reserved for combatants. This distinction has to all intents and purposes been swept away by the novel doctrines proclaimed and acted upon by the German government.

8. It is unnecessary here to dwell upon the treatment that has been meted out to the civil population of Belgium and those parts of France which are in German occupation. When Germany, long before any mines had been laid by British authorities, proceeded to sow mines upon the high seas, and, by this means, sunk a considerable number not only of British but also of neutral merchantmen with their unoffending crews, it was, so his majesty's government held, open to them to take retaliatory measures, even if such measures were of a kind to involve pressure of the civil population—not indeed of neutral states—but of their enemies. They refrained from doing so.

9. When, subsequently, English towns and defenseless British subjects, including women and children, were deliberately and systematically fired upon and killed by ships flying the flag of the imperial German navy, when quiet country towns and villages, void of defenses and possessing no military or naval importance, were bombarded by German airships, his majesty's government still abstained from drawing the logical consequences from this form of attack on defenseless citizens. Further steps in the same direction are now announced, and, in fact, have already been taken by Germany. British merchant vessels have been torpedoed at sight without any attempt being made to give warning to the crew or any opportunity being given to save their lives; a torpedo has been fired against a British hospital ship in daylight, and similar treatment is threatened to all British merchant vessels in future, as well as to any neutral ships that may happen to be found in the neighborhood of the British Isles.

10. Faced with this situation, his majesty's government consider it would be altogether unreasonable that Great Britain and her allies should be expected to remain indefinitely bound, to their grave detriment, by rules and principles of which they recognize the justice if impartially observed as between belligerents, but which are at the present moment openly set at defiance by their enemy.

11. If, therefore, his majesty's government should hereafter feel constrained to declare foodstuffs absolute contraband, or to take other measures for interfering with German trade by way of reprisals, they confidently expect that such action will not be challenged on the part of neutral states by appeals to laws and usages of war whose validity rests on their forming an integral part of that system of international doctrine which as a whole their enemy frankly boasts the liberty and intention to disregard, so long as such neutral states cannot compel the German government to abandon methods of warfare which have not in recent history been regarded as having the sanction of either law or humanity.

AMBASSADOR W. H. PAGE TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Telegram.)

American Embassy, London, April 8, 1915.

The prime minister has just handed me the following, which I have communicated to Hayes and Brookings, who strongly recommend its acceptance by their principals:

His majesty's government share the desire of the United States government for an immediate settlement of the case of the Wilhelmina. This American ship laden with foodstuffs left New York for Hamburg on Jan. 22. She called at Falmouth of her own accord on Feb. 9 and her cargo was detained as prize on Feb. 11. The writ instituting prize court proceedings was issued on Feb. 27, and claimed that the cargo should be condemned as contraband of war. No proceedings were taken or even threatened against the ship herself, and in the ordinary course the cargo would have been unloaded when seized so that the ship would be free to leave. The owners of the cargo, however, have throughout objected to the discharge of the cargo and it is because of this objection that the ship is still at Falmouth with the cargo on board.

His majesty's government have formally undertaken that even should the condemnation of the cargo as contraband be secured in the prize court they would none the less compensate the owners for any loss sustained in consequence of the ship having been stopped and proceedings taken against the cargo.

It was understood at the time that the proceedings in the prize court would be in the nature of a test case, the decision in which would govern the treatment of any subsequent shipments of food supplies to Germany in similar circumstances. Since then the situation has, however, materially changed by the issue of the order in council of March 11, 1915, and the measures taken thereunder, which prevent further supplies being sent from America to Germany, whether contraband or not.

In these circumstances there is no longer any object in continuing the judicial proceedings in the case of the Wilhelmina; for it can no longer serve as a test case, and it is really agreed that the owners of the cargo, even if proved to have no claim, are to be treated as if their claim was good. Nothing, therefore, remains but to settle the claim on proper and just conditions, and this would, in the opinion of his majesty's government, be secured most expeditiously and with the least inconvenience to all parties by an agreement between the crown and the claimants for the disposal of the whole matter. His majesty's government accordingly propose that such an agreement be arrived at on the following terms: "His majesty's government having undertaken to compensate the claimants by paying for the cargo seized on the basis of the loss of the profit the claimants would have made if the ship had proceeded in due course to Hamburg, and by indemnifying them for the delay caused to the ship so far as this delay has been due to the action of the British authorities, all proceedings in the prize court shall be stayed, on the understanding that his majesty's government buy the cargo from the claimants on the above terms. The cargo shall be discharged and delivered to the proper officer of the crown forthwith. The sum to be paid shall be assessed by a single referee nominated jointly by the ambassador of the United States of America and his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, who shall certify the total amount after making such inquiries as he may think fit, but without formal hearing or arbitration." His majesty's government would be grateful if the United States ambassador would inform the claimants of the above proposal at his early convenience and obtain their acceptance.

SALE OF MUNITIONS OF WAR TO BELLIGERENTS.

THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

(Translation.)

Imperial German Embassy, Washington, April 4, 1915.

Mr. Secretary of State: I have the honor to deliver to your excellency the inclosed memorandum on German-American trade and the question of delivery of arms.

Accept, etc., J. BERNSTOFF.
(Inclosure—Translation.)
Memorandum.

Imperial German Embassy, Washington, D. C.,
April 4, 1915.

The various British orders in council have on-sidedly modified the generally recognized principles of international law in a way which arbitrarily stops the commerce of neutral nations with Germany. Even before the last British order in council, the shipment of conditional contraband, especially food supplies, to Germany was practically impossible. Prior to the protest sent by the American to the British government on Dec. 28 last, such a shipment did not actually take place in a single case. Even after this protest the Imperial embassy knows of only a single case in which an American shipper has ventured to make such a shipment for the purpose of legitimate sale to Germany. Both ship and cargo were immediately seized by the English and are being held in an English port under the pretext of an order of the German federal council (bundesrath) regarding the grain trade, although this resolution of the federal council relates exclusively to grain and flour, and not to other foodstuffs, besides making an express exception with respect to imported foodstuffs, and although the German government gave the American government an assurance, and proposed a special organization whereby the exclusive consumption by the civilian population is absolutely guaranteed.

Under the circumstances the seizure of the American ship was inadmissible according to recognized principles of international law. Nevertheless the United States government has not to date secured the release of the ship and cargo, and has not, after a duration of the war of eight months, succeeded in protecting its lawful trade with Germany.

Such a long delay, especially in matters of food supply, is equivalent to an entire denial.

The Imperial embassy must therefore assume that the United States government acquiesces in the violations of international law by Great Britain.

Then there is also the attitude of the United States in the question of the exportation of arms. The Imperial government feels sure that the United States government will agree that in questions of neutrality it is necessary to take into consideration not only the formal aspect of the case, but also the spirit in which the neutrality is carried out.

The situation in the present war differs from that of any previous war. Therefore, any reference to arms furnished by Germany in former wars is not justified, for then it was not a question whether war material should be supplied to the belligerents, but who should supply it in competition with other nations. In the present war all nations having a war material industry worth mentioning are either involved in the war themselves or are engaged in perfecting their own armaments, and have therefore laid an embargo against the exportation of war material. The United States is accordingly the only neutral country in a position to furnish war materials. The conception of neutrality is thereby given a new purport, independently of the formal question of hitherto existing law. In contradiction thereto, the United States is building up a powerful arms industry in the broadest sense, the existing plants not only being worked but enlarged by all available means, and new ones built. The international conventions for the protection of the rights of neutral nations doubtless sprang from the necessity of protecting the existing industries of neutral nations as far as possible from injury in their business. But it can in no event be in accordance with the spirit of true neutrality if, under the protection of such international stipulations, an entirely new industry is created in a neutral state, such as is the development of the arms industry in the United States, the business whereof, under the present conditions, can benefit only the belligerent powers.

This industry is actually delivering goods only to the enemies of Germany. The theoretical willingness to supply Germany also if shipments thither were possible does not alter the case. If it is the will of the American people that there shall be a true neutrality, the United States will find means of preventing this one-sided supply of arms or at least of utilizing it to protect legitimate trade with Germany, especially that in foodstuffs. This view of neutrality should all the more appeal to the United States government because the latter enacted a similar policy toward Mexico. On Feb. 4, 1914, President Wilson, according to a statement of a representative in congress in the committee for foreign affairs of Dec. 30, 1914, upon the lifting of the embargo on arms to Mexico, declared that "we should stand for genuine neutrality, considering the surrounding facts of the case." He then held that "in that case, because Carranza had no ports, while Huerta had them and was able to import these materials, it was our duty as a nation to treat (Carranza and Huerta) upon an equality if we wished to observe the true spirit of neutrality as compared with a mere paper neutrality."

If this view were applied to the present case, it would lead to an embargo on the exportation of arms.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR.

Department of State, Washington, April 21, 1915.

Excellency: I have given thoughtful consideration to your excellency's note of the 11th of April, 1915, inclosing a memorandum of the same date, in which your excellency discusses the action of this government with regard to trade between the United States and Germany and the attitude of this government with regard to the exportation of arms from the United States to the nations now at war with Germany.

I must admit that I am somewhat at a loss how to interpret your excellency's treatment of these matters. There are many circumstances connected with these important subjects to which I would have expected your excellency to advert, but of which you make no mention, and there are other circumstances to which you do refer which I would have supposed to be hardly appropriate for discussion between the government of the United States and the government of Germany.

I shall take the liberty, therefore, of regarding your excellency's references to the course pursued by the government of the United States with regard to interferences with trade from this country, such as the government of Great Britain have attempted, as intended merely to illustrate more fully the situation to which you desire to call our attention and not as an invitation to discuss that course. Your excellency's long experience in international affairs will have suggested to you that the relations of the two governments with one another cannot wisely be made a subject of discussion with a third government, which cannot be fully informed as to the facts and which cannot be fully cognizant of the reasons for the course pursued. I believe, however, that I am justified in assuming that what you desire to call forth is a frank statement of the position of this government in regard to its obligations as a neutral power. The general attitude and course of policy of this government in the maintenance of its neutrality I am particularly anxious that your excellency should see in their true light. I have hoped that this government's position in these respects had been made abundantly clear, but I am of course perfectly willing to state it again. This seems to me the more necessary and desirable because, I regret to say, the language which your excellency employs in your memorandum is susceptible of being construed as impugning the good faith of the United States in the performance of its duties as a neutral. I take it for granted that no such implication was intended, but it is so evident that your excellency is laboring under certain false impressions that I cannot be too explicit in setting forth the facts as they are, when fully reviewed and comprehended.

In the first place, this government has at no time and in no manner yielded any one of its rights as a neutral to any of the present belligerents. It has acknowledged, as a matter of course, the right of visit and search and the right to apply the rules of contraband of war to articles of commerce. It has, indeed, insisted upon the use of visit and search as an absolutely necessary safeguard against mistaking neutral vessels for vessels owned by an enemy and against mistaking legal cargoes for illegal. It has admitted also the right of blockade if actually exercised and effectively maintained. These are merely the well known limitations which war places upon neutral commerce on the high seas. But nothing beyond these has it conceded. I call your excellency's attention to this, notwithstanding it is already known to all the world as a consequence of the publication of our correspondence in regard to these matters with several of the belligerent nations, because I cannot assume that you have official cognizance of it.

In the second place, this government attempted to secure from the German and British governments mutual concessions with regard to the measures those governments respectively adopted for the interruption of trade on the high seas. This it did, not of right, but merely as exercising the privileges of a sincere friend of both parties and as indicating its impartial good will. The attempt was unsuccessful, but I regret that your excellency did not deem it worthy of mention in modification of the impressions you expressed. We had hoped that this act on our part had shown our spirit in these times of distressing war as our diplomatic correspondence had shown our steadfast refusal to acknowledge the right of any belligerent to alter the accepted rules of war as far as so far as they affect the rights and interests of neutrals.

In the third place I note with sincere regret that, in discussing the sale and exportation of arms by citizens of the United States to the enemies of Germany, your excellency seems to be under the impression that it was within the choice of the government of the United States, notwithstanding its professed neutrality and its diligent efforts to maintain it in other particulars, to inhibit this trade, and that its failure to do so manifested an unfair attitude toward Germany. This government holds, as I believe your excellency is aware, and as it is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law, that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions, and I respectfully submit that none of the circumstances urged in your excellency's memorandum alters the principle involved. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States. It will, I feel assured, be clear to your excellency that, holding this view and considering itself in honor bound by it, it is out of the question for this government to consider such a course.

I hope that your excellency will realize the spirit in which I am drafting this reply. The friendship between the people of the United States and the people of Germany is so warm and of such long standing, the ties which bind them to one another in amity are so many and so strong, that this government feels under a special compulsion to speak with perfect frankness when any occasion arises which seems likely to create any misunderstanding, however slight or temporary, between those who represent the governments of the two countries. It will be a matter of gratification to me if I have removed from your excellency's mind any misapprehension you may have been under regarding either the policy or the spirit and purposes of the government of the United States. Its neutrality is founded upon the firm basis of conscience and good will.

Accept, etc.

W. J. BRYAN.

THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR PENFIELD.
(Translation.)

I. and R. Ministry of the Imperial and Royal House and for Foreign Affairs, Vienna, June 29, 1915.

The far-reaching effects which result from the fact that for a long time a traffic in munitions of war to the greatest extent has been carried on between the United States of America on the one hand and Great Britain and its allies on the other, while Austria-Hungary as well as Germany have been absolutely excluded from the American market, have from the very beginning attracted the most serious attention of the imperial and royal government.

If now the undersigned permits himself to address himself to this question, with which the Washington cabinet has been concerned until now only with the imperial German government, he follows the injunction of imperative duty to protect the interests intrusted to him from further serious damage which results from this situation as well to Austria-Hungary as to the German empire.

Although the imperial and royal government is absolutely convinced that the attitude of the federal government in this connection emanates from no other intention than to maintain the strictest neutrality and to conform to the letter of the provisions of international treaties, nevertheless the question arises whether the conditions as they have developed during the course of the war, certainly independently of the will of the federal government, are not such as in effect thwart the intentions of the Washington cabinet or even actually oppose them. In the affirmative case—and affirmation in the opinion of the imperial and royal government cannot be doubted—then immediately follows the further question whether it would not seem possible, even imperative, that appropriate measures be adopted toward bringing into full effect the desire of the federal government to maintain an attitude of strict parity with respect to both belligerent parties. The imperial and royal government does not hesitate to answer also this question unqualifiedly in the affirmative.

It cannot certainly have escaped the attention of the American government, which has so eminently co-operated in the work at The Hague, that the meaning and essence of neutrality are in no way exhaustively dealt with in the fragmentary provisions of the pertinent treaties. If one takes into consideration particularly the genesis of article 7 of the fifth and thirteenth conventions, respectively, upon which the federal government clearly relies in the present case, and the wording of which, as is in no way to be denied, affords it a formal pretext for the toleration of traffic in munitions of war now being carried on by the United States, it is only necessary, in order to measure the true spirit and import of this provision, which, moreover, appears to have been departed from in the prevention of the delivery of vessels of war and the prevention of certain deliveries to vessels of war of belligerent nations, to point out the fact that the detailed privileges conceded to neutral states in the sense of the preamble to the above-mentioned convention are limited by the requirements of neutrality which conform to the universally recognized principles of international law.

According to all authorities on international law who concern themselves more particularly with the question now under consideration, a neutral government may not permit traffic in contraband of war to be carried on without hindrance when this traffic assumes such a form or such dimensions that the neutrality of the nation becomes involved thereby.

If any one of the various criteria which have been laid down in science in this respect be used as a basis in determining the permissibility of commerce in contraband, one reaches the conclusion from each of these criteria that the exportation of war requisites from the United States, as it is being carried on in the present war, is not to be brought into accord with the demands of neutrality.

The question now before us is surely not whether American industries which are engaged in the manufacture of war material should be protected from loss in the export trade that was theirs in time of peace. Rather has that industry soared to unimagined heights." In order to turn out the huge quantities of arms, ammunition and other war material of every description ordered in the past month by Great Britain and her allies from the United States, not only the full capacity of the existing plants, but also their transformation and enlargement and the creation of new large plants, as well as a flocking of workmen of all trades into that branch of industry, in brief, far-reaching changes of economic life encompassing the whole country, became necessary. From no quarter then can there come any question of the right of the American government to prohibit through the issuance of an embargo that enormous exportation of war implements that is openly carried on and besides is commonly known to be availed of by only one of the parties to the war. If the federal government would exercise that power it possesses, it could not lay itself open to blame if, in order to keep within the requirements of the law of the land, it adopted the course of enacting a law. For while the principle obtains that a neutral state may not alter the rules in force within its province concerning its attitude toward belligerents while war is being waged, yet this principle, as clearly appears from the preamble to the thirteenth Hague convention, suffers an exception in the case "on l'expérience acquise en démontrerait la nécessité pour la sauvegarde de ses droits." [Where experience has shown the necessity thereof for the protection of its rights.]

Moreover, this case is already established for the American government through the fact that Austria-Hungary as well as Germany is cut off from all commercial intercourse with the United States of America without the existence of a legal prerequisite thereof—a legally constituted blockade.

In reply to the possible objection that, notwithstanding the willingness of American industry to furnish merchandise to Austria-Hungary and Germany as well as to Great Britain and her allies, it is not possible for the United States of America to trade with Austria-Hungary and Germany as the result of the war situation, it may be pointed out that the federal government is undoubtedly in a position to improve the situation described. It would be amply sufficient to confront the opponents of Austria-Hungary and Germany with the possibility of the prohibition of the exportation of foodstuffs and raw materials in case legitimate commerce in these articles between the union and the two central powers should not be allowed. If the Washington cabinet should find itself prepared for an action in this sense, it would not only be following the tradition always held in such high regard in the United States of contending for the freedom of legitimate maritime commerce, but would also earn the high merit of nullifying the wanton efforts of the enemies of Austria-Hungary and Germany to use hunger as an ally.

The imperial and royal government may therefore in the spirit of the excellent relations which have never ceased to exist between the Austro-Hungarian monarchy and the United States of America appeal to the federal government in sincere friendship, in view of the expositions here set forth, to subject its previously adopted standpoint in this so important question to a mature reconsideration. A revision of the attitude observed by the government of the union in the sense of the views advocated by the imperial and royal government would, according to the convictions of the latter, be not only within the bounds of the rights and obligations of a neutral government, but also in close keeping with those principles dictated by true humanity and love of peace which the United States has ever written on its banner.

The undersigned has the honor to ask the good offices of his excellency, the ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America, Mr. Frederic Courtland Penfield, to convey the foregoing by telegram to the attention of the Washington cabinet; he avails himself, etc.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO AMBASSADOR
PENFIELD.
(Telegram.)

Department of State, Washington, Aug. 12, 1915.

Please present a note to the royal foreign office in reply to its note of June 29, in the following sense:

The government of the United States has given careful consideration to the statement of the imperial and royal government in regard to the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States to the countries at war with Austria-Hungary and Germany. The government of the United States notes with satisfaction the recognition by the imperial and royal government of the undoubted fact that its attitude with regard to the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States is prompted by its intention to "maintain the strictest neutrality and to conform to the letter of the provisions of international treaties," but is surprised to find that the imperial and royal government implying that the observance of the strict principles of the law under the conditions which have developed in the present war is insufficient and asserting that this government should go beyond the long recognized rules governing such traffic by neutrals and adopt measures to "maintain an attitude of strict parity with respect to both belligerent parties."

To this assertion of an obligation to change or modify the rules of international usage on account of special conditions the government of the United States cannot accede. The recognition of an obligation of this sort, unknown to the international practice of the past, would impose upon every neutral nation a duty to sit in judgment on the progress of the war and to restrict its commercial intercourse with a belligerent whose naval successes prevented the neutral from trade with the enemy. The contention of the imperial and royal government appears to be that the advantages gained to a belligerent by its superiority on the sea should be equalized by the neutral powers by the establishment of a system of nonintercourse with the victor. The imperial and royal government confines its comments to arms and ammunition, but, if the principle for which it contends is sound, it should apply with equal force to all articles of contraband. A belligerent controlling the high seas might possess an ample supply of arms and ammunition but be in want of food and clothing. On the novel principle that equalization is a neutral duty, neutral nations would be obligated to place an embargo on such articles because one of the belligerents could not obtain them through commercial intercourse.

But, if this principle, so strongly urged by the imperial and royal government, should be admitted to obtain by reason of the superiority of a belligerent at sea, ought it not to operate equally as to a belligerent superior on land? Applying this theory of equalization, a belligerent who lacks the necessary munitions to contend successfully on land ought to be permitted to purchase them from neutrals, while a belligerent with an abundance of war stores or with the power to produce them should be debarred from such traffic.

Manifestly the idea of strict neutrality now advanced by the imperial and royal government would involve a neutral nation in a mass of perplexities which would obscure the whole field of international obligation, produce economic confusion and deprive all commerce and industry of legitimate fields of enterprise already heavily burdened by the unavoidable restrictions of war.

In this connection it is pertinent to direct the attention of the imperial and royal government to the fact that Austria-Hungary and Germany, particularly the latter, have, during the years preceding the present European war, produced a great surplus of arms and ammunition which they sold throughout the world and especially to belligerents. Never during that period did either of them suggest or apply the principle now advocated by the imperial and royal government.

During the Boer war between Great Britain and the South African republics the patrol of the coasts of neighboring neutral colonies by British naval vessels prevented arms and ammunitions reaching the Transvaal or the Orange Free State. The allied republics were in a situation almost identical in that respect with that in which Austria-Hungary and Germany find themselves at the present time. Yet, in spite of the commercial isolation of one belligerent, Germany sold to Great Britain, the other belligerent, hundreds of thousands of kilos of explosives, gunpowder, cartridges, shot and weapons; and it is known that Austria-Hungary also sold similar munitions to the same purchaser, though in smaller quantities. While, as compared with the present war, the quantities sold were small (table of the sales is appended), the principle of neutrality involved was the same. If at that time Austria-Hungary and her present ally had refused to sell arms and ammunition to Great Britain on the ground that to do so would violate the spirit of strict neutrality, the imperial and royal government might with greater consistency and greater force urge its present contention.

It might be further pointed out that during the Crimean war large quantities of arms and military stores were furnished to Russia by Prussian manufacturers; that during the recent war between Turkey and Italy, as this government is advised, arms and ammunition were furnished to the Ottoman government by Germany; and that during the Balkan wars the belligerents were supplied with munitions by both Austria-Hungary and Germany. While these latter cases are not analogous, as is the case of the South African war, to the situation of Austria-Hungary and Germany in the present war, they nevertheless clearly indicate the long-established practice of the two empires in the matter of trade in war supplies.

In view of the foregoing statements, this government is reluctant to believe that the imperial and royal government will ascribe to the United States a lack of impartial neutrality in continuing its legitimate trade in all kinds of supplies used to render the armed forces of a belligerent efficient, even though the circumstances of the present war prevent Austria-Hungary from obtaining such supplies from the markets of the United States, which have been and remain, so far as the action and policy of this government are concerned, open to all belligerents alike.

But, in addition to the question of principle, there is a practical and substantial reason why the government of the United States has from the foundation of the republic to the present time advocated and practiced unrestricted trade in arms and military supplies. It has never been the policy of this country to maintain in time of peace a large military establishment or stores of arms and ammunition sufficient to repel invasion by a well equipped and powerful enemy. It has desired to remain at peace with all nations and to avoid any appearance of menacing such peace by the threat of its armies and navies. In consequence of this standing policy the United States would, in the event of attack by a foreign power, be at the outset of the war seriously, if not fatally, embarrassed by the lack of arms and ammunition and by the means to produce them in sufficient quantities to supply the requirements of national defense. The United States has always depended upon the right and power to purchase arms and ammunition from neutral nations in case of foreign attack. This right, which it claims for itself, it cannot deny to others.

A nation whose principle and policy it is to rely upon international obligations and international justice to preserve its political and territorial integrity might become the prey of an aggressive nation whose policy and practice it is to increase its military strength during times of peace with the design of conquest, unless the nation attacked can, after war had been declared, go into the markets of the world and purchase the means to defend itself against the aggressor.

The general adoption by the nations of the world of the theory that neutral powers ought to prohibit the sale of arms and ammunition to belligerents would compel every nation to have in readiness at all times sufficient munitions of war to meet any emergency which might arise and to erect and maintain establishments for the manufacture of arms and ammunition sufficient to supply the needs of its military and naval forces throughout the progress of a war. Manifestly the application of this theory would result in every nation becoming an armed camp, ready to resist aggression and tempted to employ force in asserting its rights rather than appeal to reason and justice for the settlement of international disputes.

Perceiving as it does that the adoption of the principle that it is the duty of a neutral to prohibit the sale of arms and ammunition to a belligerent during the progress of a war would inevitably give the advantage to the belligerent which had encouraged the manufacture of munitions in time of peace and which had laid in vast stores of arms and ammunition in anticipation of war, the government of the United States is convinced that the adoption of the theory would force militarism on the world and work against that universal peace which is the desire and purpose of all nations which exalt justice and righteousness in their relations with one another.

The government of the United States, in the foregoing discussion of the practical reason why it has advocated and practiced trade in munitions of war, wishes to be understood as speaking with no thought of expressing or implying any judgment with regard to the circumstances of the present war, but as merely putting very frankly the argument in this matter which has been conclusive in determining the policy of the United States.

While the practice of nations, so well illustrated by the practice of Austria-Hungary and Germany during the South African war, and the manifest evil which would result from a change of that practice render compliance with the suggestions of the imperial and royal government out of the question, certain assertions appearing in the Austro-Hungarian statement as grounds for its contentions cannot be passed over without comment. These assertions are substantially as follows: (1) That the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States to belligerents contravenes the preamble to The Hague convention No. 13 of 1907; (2) that it is inconsistent with the refusal of this government to allow delivery of supplies to vessels of war on the high seas; (3) that, "according to all authorities on international law who concern themselves more properly with the question," exportation should be prevented "when this traffic assumes such a form or such dimensions that the neutrality of a nation becomes involved thereby."

As to the assertion that the exportation of arms and ammunition contravenes the preamble of The Hague convention No. 13 of 1907, this government presumes that reference is made to the last paragraph of the preamble, which is as follows: "Seeing that, in this category of ideas, these rules should not, in principle, be altered, in the course of the war, by a neutral power, except in a case where experience has shown the necessity for such change for the protection of the rights of that power."

Manifestly the only ground to change the rules laid down by the convention, one of which, it should be noted, explicitly declares that a neutral is not bound to prohibit the exportation of contraband of war, is the necessity of a neutral power to do so in order to protect its own rights. The right and duty to determine when this necessity exists rests with the neutral, not with a belligerent. It is discretionary, not mandatory. If a neutral power does not avail itself of the right, a belligerent is not privileged to complain, for in doing so it would be in the position of declaring to the neutral power what is necessary to protect that power's own rights. The imperial and royal government cannot but perceive that a complaint of this nature would invite just rebuke.

With reference to the asserted inconsistency of the course adopted by this government in relation to the exportation of arms and ammunition and that followed in not allowing supplies to be taken from its ports to ships of war on the high seas, it is only necessary to point out that the prohibition of supplies to ships of war rests upon the principle that a neutral power must not permit its territory to become a naval base for either belligerent. A warship may, under certain restrictions, obtain fuel and supplies in a neutral port once in three months. To permit merchant vessels acting as tenders to carry supplies more often than three months and in unlimited amount would defeat the purpose of the rule and might constitute the neutral territory a naval base. Furthermore, this government is unaware that any Austro-Hungarian ship of war has sought to obtain supplies from a port in the United States, either directly or indirectly. This subject has, however, already been discussed with the imperial German government, to which the position of this government was fully set forth Dec. 24, 1914.

In view of the positive assertion in the statement of the imperial and royal government as to the unanimity of the opinions of text writers as to the exportation of contraband being unneutral, this government has caused a careful examination of the principal authorities on international law to be made. As a result of this examination it has come to the conclusion that the imperial and royal government has been misled and has inadvertently made an erroneous assertion. Less than one-fifth of the authorities consulted advocate unreservedly the prohibition of the export of contraband. Several of those who constitute this minority admit that the practice of nations has been otherwise. It may not be inopportune to direct particular attention to the declaration of the German authority, Paul Einicke, who states that, at the beginning of a war, belligerents have never remonstrated against the enactment of prohibitions on trade in contraband, but adds "that such prohibitions may be considered as violations of neutrality, or at least as unfriendly acts, if they are enacted during a war with the purpose to close unexpectedly the sources of supply to a party which heretofore had relied on them."

The government of the United States deems it unnecessary to extend further at the present time a consideration of the statement of the Austro-Hungarian government. The principles of international law, the practice of nations, the national safety of the United States and other nations without great military and naval establishments, the prevention of increased armies and navies, the adoption of peaceful methods for the adjustment of international differences, and, finally, neutrality itself are opposed to the prohibition by a neutral nation of the exportation of arms, ammunition, or other munitions of war to belligerent powers during the progress of the war.

THE AUSTRO-HUNGARIAN MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO AMBASSADOR PENFIELD.

(Translation.)

Vienna, Sept. 24, 1915.

From the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the ambassador of the United States of America in Vienna:

The undersigned has had the honor to receive the note of Aug. 16, in which his excellency the ambassador of the United States of America, Frederic Courtland Penfield, was pleased to define the stand taken by the government of the United States of America toward the imperial and royal government concerning the supply of war materials to Great Britain and her allies.

The arguments set forth by the Washington cabinet disclose the various viewpoints that actuate the federal government in this connection, and, in its opinion, prevent it from taking into account the views expressed by the imperial and royal government. Although the imperial and royal government has laid stress upon investigating most minutely the contentions of the Washington cabinet, its most careful examination cannot move it to depart from the point of view which it has made clear in its note of June 29.

The remarks of the federal government are mostly based upon the erroneous premises that the imperial and royal government has essentially denied the right conceded by article 7 of the fifth and thirteenth conventions of The Hague to nationals of neutral powers to supply contraband to belligerents, whereas the imperial and royal government had expressly stated in the aforesaid note that the wording—and the wording only—of the clause referred to formally warranted the sufferance by the federal government of the trade in war materials as at present pursued by citizens of the United States of America. The imperial and royal government naturally never sought to prevail upon the Washington cabinet to depart from an existing treaty; it only pointed out that, in its opinion, an interpretation of said clause should be avoided that would be contrary to the fundamental idea and the highest principles of the laws of neutrality. A certain danger attaches to the gradual codification of international law, inasmuch as the wording of the conventions governing the laws of the nations might be considered as more important than the elementary principles underlying these laws when they have not been specifically formulated in international treaties. Such a limited interpretation should be avoided, particularly with respect to the laws of neutrality; for this very reason the preamble of the thirteenth convention of The Hague (second and third paragraphs) emphasizes that the stipulations of this agreement represent merely fragments that do not apply to all the circumstances which may arise in practice, and that, therefore, these stipulations will have to be amended or completed according to the general principles of international law.

The imperial and royal government has accordingly confined its arguments to the question whether the interpretation of the already quoted clause would not be limited by these principles; when, in support of its assertion that this would be so, it referred to the opinion expressed in international law, it naturally had in mind the authorities on the subject who have specially examined whether the exportation of war materials, against which no objection can be raised under normal circumstances, would not at times imply a breach of neutrality. The assertion to the effect that the authors unanimously agree that the exportation of contraband is contrary to neutrality is not to be found in any paragraph of the note of June 29.

Furthermore, the imperial and royal government has in no way pleaded in favor of the principle of "equalization." As a matter of fact it did not base its suggestion concerning the exportation of war materials on the fact that it was not in a position itself to import war materials from the United States of America; even if both groups of belligerents were to share in the supply of war materials from the United States of America the imperial and royal government would nevertheless maintain that the excessive exportation of war materials would be objectionable. The imperial and royal government never thought of suggesting that because Austria-Hungary could not procure war materials from the territories of one neutral power this disadvantage should be balanced by prohibiting the citizens of that neutral power to carry on a normal trade in contraband with the enemies of the dual monarchy. It, however, did protest against the creation of new and the extension of existing plants for the purpose of manufacturing and exporting war materials to such an extent that the economic life of the United States has practically, so to say, become militarized—if one can use a word that has been often wrongly applied.

The concentration of a large part of the American working power toward one goal, namely, the supply of munitions of war, constitutes a "fait nouveau" which invalidates any reference to allegedly similar cases in other wars; whether intended or not, this concentration of the national working power constitutes a one-sided and effective support of one group of belligerents, all the more conspicuous since not even noncontraband goods are supplied from the United States to the other group of belligerents. A comparison with the former wars is all the more out of place since those wars were waged between two single powers, or at least between groups of a few powers only. When munitions of war from one neutral country were supplied to one belligerent only it was then possible for the latter's enemies to apply to other neutral countries. In the present war, however, the United States of America is the only power that can be effectively considered for such supplies. This circumstance further contributes to give to the exportation of munitions of war from the union a different and far more serious character than the exportation of contraband has ever had in the past.

Since these various facts, unforeseen before, have become clearly manifest in the course of the present war only, the Austro-Hungarian government thinks it is justified to hold the opinion that, in accordance with the last paragraph of the preamble of the thirteenth convention, they should constitute a sufficient reason for modifying the regulations that govern the trade in contraband in the United States. The absolute and strict impartiality which the Washington cabinet is anxious to observe, and therefore the abstaining from any direct or indirect assistance and support of one belligerent, are undoubtedly the right of a neutral power. If experience should teach that an embargo in any direction should in the course of the war become necessary to that end, then the power concerned is justified to modify its former policy of applying neutrality. On the other hand, the present case is wholly different from all preceding ones, it is a "novum" which, as pointed out above, does not come under the already quoted article 7, and therefore has to be considered as a "cas non prévu" (unforeseen case), which in accordance with the preamble of the thirteenth convention (paragraph 3) has to be dealt with under the general principles of international law, as has already been explained.

The suggestion of the imperial and royal government concerning the supply of foodstuffs and raw materials was likewise not based on the assumption that a neutral government would be bound to compensate the advantages attained by one belligerent over the other by a system of nonintercourse with the former. The note of June 29 makes it clear that this suggestion was made solely for the purpose of pointing out to the Washington cabinet, which had declared that, as a consequence of the situation created by the war, it had become impossible for the United States of America to maintain its trade relations with the central powers, that it is within the power of the federal government to enforce such a possibility of trade relations. As a matter of fact, the trade between America and Austria-Hungary, at least with regard to noncontraband goods, has not been stopped by the naval successes of Great Britain and her allies, but by the unlawful decisions taken by the entente powers, which, as the imperial and royal government has not failed to learn, are also considered as unlawful by the government of the United States of America.

It is not contended that, were the Washington cabinet to fall in with the views of the imperial and royal government, the trade relations of the United States of America with both groups of belligerents would be less unequal than they are at present. The imperial and royal government believes that an argument could all the less be therefrom derived against a suggestion admitted by a neutral power as justified from the point of view of neutrality and otherwise, since the Washington cabinet certainly will not consider it as a duty of a neutral power to render its situation toward both belligerents as unequal as possible, or, when such a state of inequality exists, to undertake no steps whatever with a view to modify it.

Whereas the federal government has understood that according to the imperial and royal government the exportation of arms and munitions is contrary to the last paragraph of the preamble of the thirteenth convention, it should be emphasized that—as already pointed out above—the imperial and royal government bases its stand against the excessive exportation of munitions of war on the second and third paragraphs of said preamble. The reference to the last paragraph was made in connection with the unlawful exclusion of Austria-Hungary from commercial intercourse with America, and was intended to convey the suggestion that the exclusion in itself would justify the issuance by the federal government of laws providing for an embargo.

If the impression is correct that the government of the United States wishes to express the opinion that the government of a belligerent power is not entitled to take up a matter which is connected with the preservation or the application of a right of a neutral power, this is evidently due to the fact that the Washington cabinet has possibly given a too restricted interpretation to the last paragraph referred to when it understood it to apply only to strictly private rights, the preservation of which the imperial and royal government naturally holds to be a matter that concerns the neutral power only. As is shown by the report submitted by the French delegate, M. Renault, to the full sitting of The Hague conference concerning the thirteenth convention (Deuxieme conf. intern. de la paix, actes et doc., tome 1, page 326), the said paragraph aims at the preservation of neutrality; a belligerent can, therefore, not be denied the right to approach a neutral country and to invoke the clause referred to when the question of the preservation of the rights of a neutral power has a bearing on the rights of that belligerent.

The Imperial and royal government has followed with great interest the arguments of the federal government setting forth the reasons which in the opinion of the Washington cabinet, make it impossible to restrict during the present war the exportation of munitions. The Imperial and royal government nevertheless still hopes that the federal government will agree that the reasons given, which have a purely practical character, can in no way influence the legal aspect of the question; while expressing this hope, we do not venture to investigate whether the very fact that the manufacture of war materials in the United States could develop to such extraordinary dimensions does not rather lead to the conclusion that the United States, disposing as it does in an unlimited way of all the essential conditions for manufacturing munitions, such as labor, natural products and financial capital, would not be reduced to procure war material from abroad in the event of a war which would naturally stimulate the energy of its citizens.

The Imperial and royal government begs leave to make the following remarks:

Among the precedents invoked by the Washington government which, as has already been mentioned, cannot be accepted as such, the federal government lays stress on the conditions existing at the time of the Boer war, during which one of the belligerents was cut off from international trade in a way similar to that created during the present war. Such an analogy cannot possibly be detected, because Great Britain did not then decree a stoppage of trade comparable with the unlawful measures now taken by the London cabinet; the prevention of the supply of arms and ammunition referred to by the federal government does certainly not amount to a commercial isolation.

Besides, the exportation of munitions of war from Austria-Hungary during the Boer war, just as during other wars, whenever such an exportation took place, never exceeded the limits of permissibility.

The federal government undoubtedly will have learned that Herr Elnicke has publicly protested against the interpretation of one sentence taken from his treatise on neutrality in naval warfare for the purpose of justifying the duty of the Washington government; this invalidates the reference made by the Washington cabinet to German jurists and the conclusions deduced therefrom. Furthermore, the Imperial and royal government naturally holds that a neutral government cannot issue an embargo with the intention of jeopardizing the interests of one of the belligerents. Just as naturally an embargo issued by the government for the purpose of protecting its neutrality could never be described as a measure taken with the intent of injuring one of the belligerents.

Finally, the remarks of the federal government concerning the victualing of men-of-war are apparently based upon a misunderstanding.

The references made by the Imperial and royal government to the prohibition of supplying men-of-war, and to the prohibition of making certain supplies to men-of-war, was not aimed at a concrete case; it was simply intended to quote the prohibitions embodied in articles 8, 19 and 20 of the thirteenth convention of The Hague.

The undersigned has the honor to request his excellency the American ambassador to convey by wire to the Washington cabinet the above friendly communications, which are solely made in order to complete the outline of the legal status defined in the note of June 29, after a careful examination of the views expressed in the note of the federal government.

The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to renew to his excellency the American ambassador the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

NONCONTRABAND CHARACTER OF HYDRO-AEROPLANES.

Imperial German Embassy, Washington, Jan. 19, 1915.

Mr. Secretary of State: It has come to my knowledge that a number of hydroaeroplanes have been ordered in the United States for belligerent states from the Curtiss plant at Hammondsport, N. Y., and that a part of them has already been delivered.

An airship named America was delivered in October of last year to England and five more hydroaeroplanes of the same type have been delivered since.

England has also ordered twenty-four hydroaeroplanes of the I. N. model (70 horsepower) from Curtiss.

Curtiss is also building for England twelve hydroaeroplanes of the K model of 160 horsepower.

Russia has also recently ordered a number of hydroaeroplanes of the K model from Curtiss. How many is not yet known.

The motors for the aeroplanes are built by Curtiss himself at Hammondsport, partly by the Herschel Spillman Motor factory at North Tonawanda, N. Y.

The wings are made at the Curtiss plant, the minor parts by the Autocrat Manufacturing Co. The Tonawanda Boat company furnishes the boat part.

There is no doubt that hydroaeroplanes must be regarded as war vessels whose delivery to belligerent states by neutrals should be stopped under article 8 of the thirteenth convention of the second Hague conference of Oct. 18, 1907. Hydroaeroplanes are not mentioned by name in the convention simply because there was none in 1907 at the time of the conference.

On the supposition that hydroaeroplanes are delivered to belligerents against the wishes of the government of the United States, I have the honor to bring the foregoing to your excellency's kind knowledge.

Accept, etc.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR.

Department of State, Washington, Jan. 29, 1915.

Excelsi: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 19th instant, and in reply have to inform you that the statements contained in your excellency's note have received my careful consideration in view of the earnest purpose of this government to perform every duty which is imposed upon it as a neutral by treaty stipulation and international law.

The essential statement in your note, which implies an obligation on the part of this government to interfere in the sale and delivery of hydroaeroplanes to belligerent powers, is:

As to this assertion of the character of hydroaeroplanes I submit the following comments: The fact that a hydroaeroplane is fitted with apparatus to rise from and alight upon the sea does not in my opinion give it the character of a vessel any more than the wheels attached to an aeroplane fitting it to rise from and alight upon land give the latter the character of a land vehicle. Both the hydroaeroplane and the aeroplane are essentially air craft; as an aid in military operations they can only be used in the air; the fact that one starts its flight from the surface of the sea and the other from the land is a mere incident—which in no way affects their aerial character.

In view of these facts I must dissent from your excellency's assertion that "there is no doubt that hydroaeroplanes must be regarded as war vessels," and consequently I do not regard the obligations imposed by treaty or by the accepted rules of international law applicable to air craft of any sort.

In this connection I further call to your excellency's attention that according to the latest advice received by this department the German imperial government include "balloons and flying machines and their component parts" in the list of conditional contraband, and that in the imperial prize ordinance, drafted Sept. 30, 1909, and issued in the Reichsgesetzblatt on Aug. 3, 1914, appear as conditional contraband "airships and flying machines" (article 23, section 8). It thus appears that the imperial government have placed and still retain air craft of all descriptions in the class of conditional contraband, for which no special treatment involving neutral duty is, so far as I am advised, provided by any treaty to which the United States is a signatory or adhering power.

As in the views of this department the provisions of convention 13 of the second Hague conference do not apply to hydroaeroplanes I do not consider it necessary to discuss the question as to whether those provisions are in force during the present war.

Accept, etc.,

W. J. BRYAN.

FLOOD DISASTER IN ERIE, PA.

Heavy rains for three days, followed by a cloudburst on the evening of Aug. 3, 1915, caused a loss of twenty-seven lives and ruined property to the estimated value of $7,000,000 in Erie, Pa. Mill creek, which divides the city, became a torrent and swept away some 300 dwellings and fifty store buildings, piling up wreckage to a height of 100 feet in places. The bursting of the Glenwood dam caused additional damage, the water in some sections of the city reaching the second stories of buildings.

Flood damages from the heavy rains were reported from Meadville, Cambridge Springs, Titusville and other towns in Pennsylvania. In New York city and vicinity losses amounting to $1,000,000 were sustained.

DEATH OF BOOKER T. WASHINGTON.

Booker T. Washington, leader of the negro people of the United States and principal of Tuskegee Institute for Negroes, died at Tuskegee, Ala., Nov. 14, 1915. He was 56 or 57 years of age, the exact date of his birth not being known. He had been in failing health for some time and suffered a nervous breakdown in New York city a few days before his death. Dr. Washington was born a slave on a plantation near Hales Ford, Va. His father was thought to be a slave from a neighboring plantation, but little was known about him by the son, who took the name of Washington when he first went to school. Supporting himself and his mother by working as a miner, janitor and waiter, he obtained his education at Hampton Institute. It was while there that he conceived the idea, which he worked out at Tuskegee, of an industrial education for the negro race. In course of time the Tuskegee institute developed into a school with thousands of pupils and property valued at about $2,000,000. Dr. Washington was a distinguished lecturer, was honored by Harvard and Dartmouth with degrees and was regarded as a friend by many public men. President Roosevelt on one occasion entertained him at lunch in the white house in Washington.

JESS WILLARD VS. JACK JOHNSON.

Jess Willard, aged 29, white, defeated Jack Johnson, aged 37, colored, in a contest for the heavy weight pugilistic championship, of the world at Marianao, a suburb of Havana, Cuba, April 5, 1915. The decision came in the shape of a knockout blow on the negro champion's chin in the twenty-sixth round. It was the longest contest for a world's title since the adoption of the marquis of Queensberry rules in America, the previous record being the twenty-one rounds in the Corbett-Sullivan fight in New Orleans, Sept. 7, 1892. Johnson, in the earlier stages of the battle, had the best of it, but as the contest went on he weakened and finally had to take the count.

The fight, which took place in an inclosure on the Oriental racetrack, was witnessed by 32,000 persons, the gate receipts amounting to $110,000. The terms of the contest were that Johnson was to receive $30,000, win, lose or draw, and $2,000 additional for expenses, and a percentage of the moving picture receipts. Willard received a percentage of the net receipts and a share in the picture money. The referee of the fight, which was limited to forty-five rounds, was Jack Welsh.

PACKEY M'FARLAND VS. MIKE GIBBONS.

In a ten-round, no-decision boxing contest at Brighton Beach, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1915, Packey McFarland defeated Mike Gibbons, according to the opinion of most of the experts present. The bout of the welter weights was witnessed by 26,092 spectators, who paid from $1 to $5 each for the privilege. The total receipts were $58,069.

YACHTING.

THE AMERICA'S CUP.

The New York Yacht club and the Royal Ulster Yacht club, representing Sir Thomas Lipton, reached an agreement in July, 1913, to contest for the historic America's cup in September, 1914. Owing chiefly to a disagreement as to the size of the competing boats, no races for the trophy had been sailed since 1903. Sir Thomas Lipton proposed that the yachts be limited to seventy-five feet on the water line. According to the deed of gift, the defending club has the right to select a vessel of such size as it pleases, provided it be not less than sixty-five nor more than ninety feet on the water line, and the New York Yacht club was therefore unwilling to meet the condition proposed. July 20, 1913, the Ulster Yacht club of Belfast cabled that the conditions prescribed by the New York Yacht club had been accepted and signed.

Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger, Shamrock IV., arrived at New York Aug. 16, 1914, after making most of the voyage from England under its own sail, coming by way of the Azores and Bermuda. In the meantime the war in Europe had broken out and to avoid possible capture by German cruisers the yacht was towed from Bermuda to Sandy Hook. It was decided by Sir Thomas that under the circumstances it would not be advisable to attempt a race in 1914, and with the consent of the New York Yacht club it was postponed until 1915. The war not having ended then, the race was again postponed, no date being set. The Shamrock IV. was laid up in a South Brooklyn shipyard.

In America three contenders for the honor of meeting the British yacht had been constructed. These were the Resolute, designed and built at the Herreshoff yards at Bristol, R. I., and the Vanitie, built for Alexander S. Cochrane, and the Owen boat Defiance. In the trial races, which were not completed, the Resolute made rather the best showing and would probably have been selected to represent America. In one of the trials, June 10, it sailed over a windward and leeward course of fifteen miles in 3:16:41, a record better than any made over that kind of course in the America cup races.

RECORD OF RACES TO DATE.

1851—Aug. 22. In this, the year of the great exhibition in London, the Royal Yacht Club of England offered a cup to the winner of a yacht race around the Isle of Wight. The course was 60 miles in length. The race was won by the schooner yacht America, designed by George Steers for John C. Stevens of the New York Yacht club. The America was 94 feet over all, 88 feet on the water line, 22½ feet beam and 11¼ feet draft. There was no time allowance and the competing yachts ranged in size from a three-masted 392-ton schooner, the Brilliant, to the 47-ton cutter the Aurora, which came in second in the race. The time of the America was 10 hours and 34 minutes; that of the Aurora was 24 minutes slower. The cup after that became known as the America's cup and has now been successfully defended for sixty-two years.

RESOLUTE VS. VANITIE.

The sloop yachts Resolute and Vanitie met in a series of races in July and August, 1915, and as in 1914 the Resolute proved the faster craft, winning all but one of the contests. The Vanitie came in first in a thirty-mile race on Long Island sound July 5 by a margin of a little over 3 minutes corrected time. In the race of July 7 the Resolute won by 2:17, July 10 by 4:48, July 15 by 1:30, July 17 by 26:12 (elapsed time), July 27 by 5:04 and Aug. 5 by 1:08 corrected time.

Addison C. Hanan's Class P sloop, flying the burgee of the Indian Harbor Yacht club of Greenwich, Conn., won the Manhasset trophy by defeating the Price syndicate's Valiant of the Chicago Yacht club in three races, sailed on Lake Michigan, off Chicago, Sept. 4, 6 and 7, 1915. The Josephine also won the Ocean-Great Lakes cup put up for competition by Commodore William A. Lydon. In the first race the Josephine won by more than 5 minutes, in the second race by 3 minutes 58 seconds and in the third and final race by 9 minutes 3 seconds.

The Manhasset Challenge cup was brought to Chicago in 1912 by the Michigan. It was successfully defended by the Chicago Yacht club in 1915, when the Stranger of the Rhode Island Yacht club attempted to recover the trophy for the eastern yachtsmen.

POWER BOAT RACING.

GOLD CHALLENGE CUP.

The annual races for the Gold Challenge cup of the American Power Boat association took place over the thirty mile Manhasset bay course off Port Washington, N. Y., Aug. 14, 16 and 17, 1915. The trophy was won by Miss Detroit, a hydroplane designed by C. C. Smith of Algonac, Mich., and owned by the Detroit Power Boat association. The boats finishing and time made by each in the first race were:

Miss Detroit	42:41%
Baby Speed Demon	42:59
Baby Reliance	43:36
Presto	50:09

Miss Detroit's average, 42.17 nautical miles or 48.49 statute miles per hour.

Boats finishing and time in second race:

Miss Detroit	43:56%
Tech, Jr.	44:50

Miss Detroit's average, 40.90 nautical miles or 47.10 statute miles per hour.

Boats finishing and time in third and last race:

Miss Detroit	1:03:34
Tech, Jr.	1:33:30

Miss Detroit's average, 29.62 nautical miles or 34.03 statute miles per hour.

RECORD FOR SPEED.

In speed trials over the Manhasset bay measured mile Aug. 18, 1915, the hydroplane Tech, Jr., twice reached a speed of 54.54 statute miles per hour, this constituting a new world's record. The previous record was 51.66 miles, held by Baby Speed Demon, made in 1914 on the Lake George course. Miss Detroit, winner of the Gold Challenge cup, could only make an average of 49.46 miles.

The record made by Tech, Jr., was put completely in the shade by James A. Pugh's forty-foot hydroplane Disturber IV., in a speed trial which took place in the harbor of the Chicago Yacht club on Lake Michigan Sept. 12, 1915. The tests took place on a half-mile course, there being six heats. On the first trial Disturber made the mile in 29% seconds, the second one was done in 29% seconds, the third in 29% seconds, the fourth in 29% seconds, fifth in 29% seconds and the sixth in 29% seconds. The fastest lap trial was at the rate of nearly sixty-two miles an hour, while the average for the six trials was 60.75 miles per hour.

WRIGLEY CUP CONTEST.

The course was around the four-mile, Carter Harrison and Lake View cribs, a distance for each lap of fifteen and one-eighth miles. Each race was of two laps or thirty or one-fourth miles. James A. Pugh's forty-foot, twenty-four cylinder boat, Disturber IV., had everything its own way, as will be seen from the following summary:

GOLF LINKS.

Golf is played on specially prepared courses from three to five miles around laid out on open ground, preferably undulating, with short grass, but having natural obstacles, such as walls, holes, ruts and ditches. If these are not present artificial obstacles, or "hazards," are introduced by hollowing out the earth in places or raising embankments between the holes. Of these there are usually eighteen, the distance between them being from 100 to 500 yards, according to the character of the land. The holes are $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter and each is surrounded by a space about forty feet in diameter on which the ground is leveled and the grass is cut short. This is the "putting green."

DAVIS CHALLENGE CUP.

The Davis international tennis challenge cup was taken from the United States by Australia as the result of the games played in 1914. Owing to the war there was no contest for the trophy in 1915.

The net is extended across the middle, or 39 feet from each end. The height of the net is $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet at the posts and 3 feet at the center, the posts standing three feet outside the side lines. The lines at the ends of the court parallel with the net are the base lines, while parallel with the base lines, but only 21 feet from the net, are the service lines. Half way between the side lines is the half court line dividing the space on each side of the net into the right and left courts. For a double court the base lines are 36 feet long, the side lines being each $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet outside the interior side lines and parallel to them. The net posts in this case also must be three feet outside the side lines.

Lines of single and double court.

The best way to lay out a tennis court is to start with the lines for a single court, as they are included in those for a double court. First measure a base line of 27 feet parallel with the net and 39 feet from it. Then take a tape or other measure and extend it 39 feet from one of the base lines and at right angles to it. Take a second measure of 47 feet 5 inches and extend it from the other end of the base line to the outer end of the side (39 foot) line. This will make one corner of the court on one side of the net, or a right-angled triangle of which the base is 27 feet, the side 39 feet and the diagonal or hypotenuse 47 feet 5 inches. The other angles can be made in the same way. To make a double court simply prolong the base line 4 feet 6 inches in each direction and join the four points to get the side lines.

HUEY VS. MOORE.

William Huey of Chicago won the three cushion billiard championship of the world by defeating George W. Moore Sept. 28-30, 1915, by a total score of 150 to 138 in a match played in blocks of 50 for three nights. The score by blocks was: 1st, Moore 50, Huey 40; 2d, Moore 40, Huey 60; 3d, Moore 48, Huey 50.

MOORE VS. DE ORO.

In a match for the three cushion billiard championship of the world, played in New York, N. Y., May 17, 1915, George Moore, holder of the title, defeated Alfred De Oro, challenger, by a total score of 150 to 144. Moore won the first block 50 to 49 and the second 50 to 42, giving him a lead of 9 points. De Oro took the last block 53 to 50, which left him 6 points behind on the match.

INTERSTATE CHAMPIONSHIP.

Charles Ellis of Cleveland won the championship of the Interstate Three Cushion Billiard league by defeating August Kleckhefer of Milwaukee April 28-29, 1915, by a score of 100 to 85. The two were tied at the end of the regular schedule. The deciding contests were played one in Cleveland and one in Milwaukee, Kleckhefer winning the first 50 to 44 and Ellis the second 56 to 35.

WORLD'S RECORD HIGH RUN.

Charles Morin of Chicago made a high run of 18 in an intercity tournament three cushion billiard game with Frank Benson in St. Louis, Mo., May 20, 1915. It was accepted as a world's record, as the run of 18 made by Pierre Mampone in St. Louis in September, 1914, was made in an exhibition game.

18-2 HANDICAP EVENT.

William F. Hoppe won first prize in a handicap 18-2 balkline billiard tournament held in

New York city and ending Nov. 23, 1915. In the concluding match played with W. Cochran of Chicago Hoppe made a world's record run at this style of billiards of 308. Final standing:

MOTORING.

By J. C. Burton of Motor Age.

With the nations of Europe in the clutch of Mars and the drivers of the old world piloting officers' cars at the front or serving in a more humble capacity in the trenches, automobile racing was confined exclusively to America during 1915, when twelve road contests and fourteen speedway events were held.

The feature of the 1915 contest season was the exceptionally large number of speedway races staged in which several world's records were established and for which a total of $287,000 in prize money was offered. Before the advent of the new year there were but three speedways in this country—the 2.5 mile brick track at Indianapolis and the natural dirt courses at Sioux City and Tacoma, each of which had banked turns. During 1915, however, the following speedways were constructed and dedicated:

Chicago, two mile wooden track; Omaha, one mile wooden track; Des Moines, one mile wooden track; Minneapolis, two mile concrete track; Providence, one mile asphalt track, and New York, two mile wooden track. In addition, the dirt course at Tacoma was rebuilt with two by fours and covered with an asphaltum surface.

The first speedway race of the season was held at Indianapolis, where the fifth annual international sweepstakes was won by Ralph de Palma in a German Mercedes. His average for the 500 miles, 89.84 miles per hour, shattered all records for the Hoosier course.

Chicago dedicated its new speedway with a 500 mile motor Derby on June 26, when Dario Resta, one of the three foreign drivers to make an American invasion during the year, was crowned victor. At the wheel of a French Peugeot he established a new world's record for the distance, completing the five centuries in 5:07:26, an average of 97.58 miles per hour. In this contest the late Harry Grant, driving an English Sunbeam, covered the 500 miles without a single stop, finishing fifth at a speed of 94.3 miles per hour.

The second annual 300 mile Sioux City speedway race was run on July 3, Eddie Rickenbacher, the Maxwell driver, winning the event. Two days later, when the Omaha track was dedicated with a 300 mile contest, Rickenbacher repeated his victory.

Motors also sang their songs of hate and exhausts barked their defiance at Tacoma during the two-day Independence day holiday. Grover Ruckstell, at the wheel of a Mercer, taking the Montamathon July 4, and his teammate, Eddie Pullen, winning the Potlatch trophy the following day. At this same meet George Parsons, driving a Parsons Special, annexed first honors in the Intercity race, a contest for native son drivers of Washington.

After a four weeks' hiatus speedway racing was resumed Aug. 7, when Ralph Mulford, driving a Duesenberg, captured the 300 mile event at Des Moines and Dario Resta defeated Earl Cooper, Bob Burman and Barney Oldfield in a 100 mile challenge race on the Chicago track. The latter contest marked the crowding of 100 miles within 60 minutes for the first time in America, for the victor completed the century in 58:54, an average of 101.86 miles per hour.

The closest finish in the history of the sport was staged in the 500 mile race at Minneapolis Sept. 4, Earl Cooper, the Stutz driver, taking first money from his teammate, Gil Anderson, by the eyelash margin of one-fourth of a second. The inaugural meet on the Providence speedway was held Sept. 18, when Bob Burman's Peugeot led the field home in a twenty-five mile dash and Eddie Rickenbacher was first to get the checkered flag in the feature event, a 100 mile race.

Father Knickerbocker had his first taste of speedway racing on Oct. 9, when the Sheepshead Bay track was opened with a 350 mile contest, which Gil Anderson won at the world's record speed of 102.56 miles per hour. As the season's finale a 100 mile invitation event was held at New York Nov. 2, when Dario Resta annexed first money and hung up a new average for the distance of 105.3 miles per hour.

In addition to the speedway contests twelve road races were run during 1915, but three of them were so local in character that they did not attract national attention. The road racing season opened in January at San Diego, where Earl Cooper won the Point Loma event, an added feature of the Panama-California exposition.

Two of the most famous of America's road racing classics, the Vanderbilt cup and the Grand Prize, were run over a course in the grounds of the Panama-Pacific exposition, San Francisco. Dario Resta, the Peugeot driver, was crowned with the laurel of victory in both events.

In the early spring Barney Oldfield, the veteran of all American drivers, captured two road races with his Maxwell, taking first honors at Tucson, Ariz., and Venice, Cal. Bob Burman, noted for his hard luck and failure to finish, shook his persistent jinx at Oklahoma City in April and won a road race there.

The annual Elgin road races held in August proved the best contests of this character as well as the fastest of the season. Each resulted in a Stutz triumph. Earl Cooper winning the Chicago Automobile club cup and Gil Anderson annexing the Elgin trophy. Cooper and Anderson each shattered the course record, the latter's average for 301.84 miles being 77.25 miles per hour.

Five drivers lost their lives during the 1915 season. Jack Callaghan was killed in practice for one of the California events; Billy Carson sustained fatal injuries in the Tacoma Montamathon; C. C. Cox plunged to his death when his car leaped off the Sioux City track; Joe Cooper was crushed under the Sebring Special at Des Moines, and Harry Grant, twice winner of the Vanderbilt cup, died as a result of burns suffered in practice for the New York speedway race.

There was no automobile competition of any kind across the Atlantic during the year just past. The French were too busy repelling German attacks to think of staging the Grand Prix, and Brooklands, the famous English speedway on which so many world's records have been established in the last decade, was converted into a camp for military aviators. Only three European drivers—Dario Resta, Jean Porporato and Noel von Raalte—were free to cross the ocean and participate in American races. Their invasion was most profitable, however, as Resta won approximately $50,000 in purses, Porporato took $11,000 at Chicago and Von Raalte added $1,400 to his bank roll at Indianapolis.

With the exception of five 100 mile events there was very little dirt track racing during 1915, the meets of this nature being confined to exhibitions by the barnstorming troupes, which seceded from the American Automobile association and held their Mercurian fetes under the rules of a new organization, the International Motor Contest association. The winners of the 100 mile contests were: Cleveland, Eddie Hearne (Case); Columbus, Bill Endicott (Maxwell); Galesburg, Ill., Eddie O'Donnell (Duesenberg); Burlington, Iowa, Bob Burman (Peugeot) and Kalamazoo, Mich., Ralph de Palma (Stutz). De Palma also won seven races out of seven starts with his Stutz at a dirt track meet held in Saginaw, Mich., July 4.

There was only one hill climb of any importance during the year, the annual event at Uniontown, Pa., which was featured by the defeat of Ralph de Palma, driving a Mercedes, by an amateur pilot, C. W. Johnson, who took the free-for-all with a Packard.

Another amateur achievement worthy of note is the Chicago-New York record of E. C. Patterson, the Chicago sportsman, who in a nonmotor-stop run of 1,004 miles covered the distance in 35:43 with a Packard. The former record was 39:53, made by a Franklin car in 1907.

The name of E. G. Baker also should be placed on the roll of honor for 1915. Without a relief driver, Baker piloted a Stutz from San Diego to New York, 3,728.4 miles, in 11 days 7 hours and 15 minutes. Before this year all transcontinental records were made with two or more drivers alternating at the steering wheel.

HOUR RECORDS.

The world's record for twenty-four hours is 1,581 miles 1,310 yards, an average pace of 65.9 miles an hour, made June 28-29, 1907, by S. F. Edge in a six cylinder Napier on the three and one-quarter mile cement track at Weybridge, England.

The circular track twenty-four hour record was raised to 1,253 miles by Patschke and Poole in a Stearns at Brighton Beach track, New York, Aug. 19-20, 1910. The former record was 1,196 miles, made by Patschke and Mulford in a Lozier in 1909.

An American competitive speedway twenty-four hour record was created at Los Angeles, where a flat covered 1,491 miles.

The one hour record was put at 107 miles 1,672 yards by a twelve cylinder Sunbeam on the English Brooklands track Oct. 11, 1913.

The twelve hour record was put at 1,078 miles 400 yards by the same car and on the same track on Oct. 11, 1913.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RECORD.

A record of 10 days 18 hours 12 minutes from New York to San Francisco was made Aug. 8-13, 1910, by L. L. Whitman, driving a four cylinder Reo, the fastest trip ever made across the continent in a motor car. The record from San Francisco to New York is 15 days 12 hours, made in a Franklin in 1906 by Whitman.

AERONAUTICS IN 1915.

AEROPLANING.

Many improvements in aeroplaning were made in 1915, but these were chiefly in the direction of making them more useful as engines of war. Their speed and carrying capacity were largely increased so that they could carry more men, bombs and machine guns. The French and Germans took the lead in building improved craft and probably the British were not far behind them. Naturally details were not revealed.

RECORDS FOR ALTITUDE.

The record for height attained by aeroplane is held by Heinrich Oelreich, a German aviator, who ascended from Leipzig, Germany, July 14, 1914, and reached a height of approximately 24,606 feet. The best American record is held by Capt. H. LeR. Muller of the 1st aeroplane corps, U. S. army, who, starting from a field at San Diego, Cal., Oct. 8, 1914, ascended to a height of 17,441 feet. THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1916.

The next president and vice-president of the United States will be chosen Nov. 7, 1916. As is well known, these officials are not elected directly by the people, but by electors, who are voted for on the party tickets on the date named. The electors chosen meet on the second Monday in January following their election in their respective states and vote by ballot for president and vice-president of the United States. The result is transmitted to the president of the senate in Washington. On the second Wednesday in February following the meeting of the electors the electoral votes are opened and counted in the presence of both houses of congress and the result announced by the president of the senate.

While the president and vice-president are thus formally elected in 1917, the actual choice is made in 1916. Many of the states now provide for the expression of presidential preferences at the party primaries and it is possible that the candidates in 1916 will practically be named in this way. Unofficial estimates indicate that 992 delegates will constitute the republican national convention of 1916. A majority of this number, whose vote is necessary to nominate a president, is 497.

The eighteen primary states will elect 574 delegates, or 77 more than enough to nominate. Following is a list of these states with the delegates to which they will be entitled in the republican national convention and the date in 1916 when their primaries will be held:

State and primary.	Delegates.
California, May 9.....	26
Illinois, April 9.....	58
Indiana, March 7.....	30
Iowa, April 10.....	26
Maryland, May 1.....	16
Massachusetts, April 25.....	36
Michigan, April 3.....	30
Minnesota, March 14.....	24
Nebraska, April.....	16
New Jersey, May 23.....	28
North Dakota, March 21.....	10
Ohio, May 9.....	48
Oregon, April 21.....	10
Pennsylvania, May 16.....	76
South Dakota, June 6.....	10
West Virginia, June 6.....	16
Wisconsin, April 4.....	26
New York, April.....	88

However, in the spring and summer of 1916 national party conventions will be held for the nomination of candidates for president and vice-president of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1917. These conventions are not provided for by the constitution, but it has become the invariable rule that the candidates presented by them are voted for by the presidential electors. The latter are nominated at the state party conventions or primaries and are elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of every fourth year preceding the end of the presidential term. Each state is entitled to as many electors as it has senators and representatives. No senator or representative or person holding an office of trust or honor under the United States may be an elector. The twelfth amendment to the constitution prescribes how the electors shall meet and cast their ballots and how congress shall count the votes. The article is as follows:

"The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for president and vice-president, one of whom at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as president, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as vice-president, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as president and of all persons voted for as vice-president, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the president of the senate.

"The president of the senate shall, in the presence of the senate and house of representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for president shall be the president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as president, the house of representatives shall choose immediately by ballot the president. But in choosing the president the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the house of representatives shall not choose a president, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March next following, then the vice-president shall act as president, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the president.

"The person having the greatest number of votes as vice-president shall be the vice-president, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest members on the list the senate shall choose the vice-president; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of president shall be eligible to that of vice-president of the United States."

Section 5, article II., of the constitution prescribes the qualifications of the president as follows:

"No person except a natural born citizen or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the constitution shall be eligible to the office of president; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of 35 years and been fourteen years a resident within the United States."

The qualifications of the vice-president are the same as those of the president.

DELEGATES TO REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

At a meeting of the republican national committee held in Washington, D. C., Dec. 16-17, 1913, the following resolution was adopted:

"Confident that the action of this committee, representing, as it does, practically the unanimous sentiment of the republican electors of the states, will be ratified by the republican electors of the states, be it

"Resolved, That this committee shall issue a call for the national convention, to be held in the year 1916, to nominate candidates for president and vice-president in accordance with the following basis of representation: Each state shall be entitled in such convention to four delegates at large; one delegate at large for each representative in congress at large from any state; one delegate from each congressional district; an additional delegate from each congressional district in which the vote either for republican presidential electors in 1908 or for the republican candidate for congress in 1914 shall not have been less than 7,500, and that for each delegate chosen an alternate delegate shall be chosen in the same manner and at the same time to act in the absence of the delegate.

"Provided, however, That the above basis of representation shall not be made the basis of the call for the national convention to be held in the year 1916, unless prior to Jan. 1, 1915, republican state conventions held under the laws of the states or called by the republican state committees of the states in such number of states as are entitled to cast a majority of the votes in the present electoral college, shall ratify the action of this committee in respect to determining this basis of representation."

This action was taken for the purpose of reducing the number of delegates from the southern states to the national convention. Under this plan the southern delegates in the 1916 convention will be 16 per cent of the total number instead of 33 per cent, as in 1912. The total number of delegates will be reduced from 1,078, as in 1912, to 993. The state conventions of the republican party gave their assent to the plan, which therefore will be carried out. In the next national convention the reductions in the state delegations will be as follows:

Alabama	8	South Carolina.....	7
Arkansas	3	Tennessee	3
Florida	4	Texas	16
Georgia	11	Virginia	8
Louisiana	8	Hawaii	2
Mississippi	8	Porto Rico.....	4
New York.....	2	Philippine islands....	2
North Carolina.....	3

DATES OF NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

The republican national convention will be held in Chicago beginning June 7, 1916. The democratic convention will be held in St. Louis beginning June 14, 1916.

GRANDFATHER CLAUSE DECLARED VOID.

By a unanimous decision announced June 21, 1915, the United States Supreme court declared void the "grandfather" clause enacted in Oklahoma and Maryland. The clause in the Oklahoma constitution upon which the court ruled reads in part as follows:

"No person shall be registered as an elector of this state or be allowed to vote in any election herein unless he be able to read and write any section of the constitution of the state of Oklahoma; but no person who was, on Jan. 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under any form of government or who at that time resided in some foreign nation, and no lineal descendant of such person shall be denied the right to register and vote because of his inability to so read and write sections of such constitution."

The court held that arbitrarily to select a date such as 1866 and provide that persons not qualified to vote on that date or whose ancestors were not so qualified are barred from voting or must submit to voting tests not required of others is in violation of the fifteenth amendment to the constitution.

EXECUTION OF CHARLES A. BECKER.

CENTENARIANS IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

According to the census of 1910 there were then in the United States 3,555 persons 100 years of age and over. Of these, 1,350 were men and 2,175 were women. Classified according to the color they were: White men, 326; white women, 438; total, 764; negro men, 1,004; negro women, 1,671; total, 2,675; Indian men, 50; Indian women, 66; total, 116. Classified as to place of birth, 439 were native white and 293 foreign born white. The number of centenarians reported by the census of 1900 was 3,504. "It may be noted," says a census report in commenting on these figures, "that the proportion of centenarians, according to the census returns, was less in 1910 than in 1900. In fact, the proportion has steadily decreased from census to census for over half a century. The number of centenarians reported in 1910 was equal to 4 for each 100,000 of the total population while the corresponding ratio in 1850 was 11. It is improbable that any such decrease in longevity has actually occurred. By no means have all those who report themselves as 100 years old or more, in fact, reached that age, and the apparent reduction in the proportion of centenarians is probably due to greater accuracy in the returns."

Cadaract, Mrs. Victoria, 105, Oak Harbor, O., March 22.

Cherowski, Morris, 100, Chicago, Ill.

De Long, Joseph, 101, Brooklyn, N. Y., May 11.

Fiddlenan, Mitchell, 103, Chicago, Ill., March 3.

Goodwin, Asa, 108, Bessemer, Ala., Feb. 28.

Koskoff, Hannah, 117, in New York, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1914.

Mullen, Mrs. Katrina, 101, Westville, Ill., Jan. 22.

Oldenburg, Mrs. Henrietta, 105, Edison Park, Ill., Dec. 29, 1914.

Saslowsky, 100, in Chicago, Ill., March 6.

Schwartz, Mrs. Jeannette, 106, New York, N. Y., Sept. 3.

Shay, John, 113, in New Orleans, La., Oct. 22.

Watson, Charles, 100, Berkeley, Cal., Jan. 7.

In Canada in 1911 there were 120 persons aged tons were added before the close of the fiscal year, making the total from both sources 1,373 vessels of 744,618 gross tons. This is the largest annual addition to the American merchant fleet in the history of the United States.

In five states in 1892 the electoral vote was divided: California gave 3 electoral votes for Cleveland and 1 for Harrison and Ohio gave 1 for Cleveland and 2 for Harrison; in Michigan, by act of the legislature, each congressional district voted separately for an elector; in Oregon 1 of the 4 candidates for electors on the people's party ticket was also on the democratic ticket; in North Dakota 1 of the 2 people's party electors cast his vote for Cleveland, this causing the electoral vote of the state to be equally divided among Cleveland, Harrison and Weaver. In 1896 California gave 8 electoral votes to McKinley and 1 to Bryan; Kentucky gave 12 to McKinley and 1 to Bryan. In Maryland in 1904 7 of the presidential electors chosen were democrats and 1 republican. In 1908 Maryland elected 6 democratic and 2 republican electors. In 1912 California elected 11 progressive and 2 democratic electors.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

The library of congress was established in 1800 in the city of Washington, D. C. It was burned in 1814, and in 1851 lost 35,000 volumes by fire. The present library building, which cost $6,347,000, was opened to the public in November, 1897. It is located a short distance east of the capitol and is the largest and finest building of its kind in the world.

June 30, 1914, the library contained 2,253,309 books and pamphlets, 141,712 maps, 663,474 pieces of music and 376,812 photographs, prints, engravings and lithographs. The copyright office is a distinct division of the library with its own force of employees. The total number of employees in the library is 525 and the annual cost of maintenance is now about $850,000, including $200,000 for printing and binding.

The librarian of congress is Herbert Putnam, salary, $6,500; chief assistant librarian, Appleton P. C. Griffin, $4,000.

ANTITIPPING LEGISLATION DEFEATED.

In the Wisconsin assembly a bill was passed in the spring of 1915 forbidding the giving or accepting of "tips" or gratuities in hotels, restaurants, barber shops and railroad trains. The measure was vetoed by Gov. Philipp on the ground that it would interfere with personal liberty. The senate passed the bill over the veto, but the house killed it.

In the Minnesota house of representatives a bill forbidding tipping was passed, but it failed to get the approval of the senate committee on general legislation.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[From census bureau report.]

The apportionment of representatives in congress, under the first six censuses—1790 to 1840, inclusive—was made by congress, each by a separate act. The law for taking the census of 1850, which was intended to be permanent, presented a rule of apportionment, fixed the number of members of the house at 233 and directed the secretary of the interior thereafter to make the apportionment. The apportionment of 1860 was also made under this law, but congress, on March 4, 1862, fixed the total number of representatives at 241, and the secretary of the interior apportioned the new quotas to the states. The apportionments from and after the census of 1870 were made by congress, each by a separate act, hence it may be assumed that the power conferred on the secretary of the interior by the act of May 23, 1850, was repealed by implication. The following shows the dates of the apportionment acts and the ratio of population to each representative:

THE CAPITOL IN WASHINGTON.

The corner stone of the original capitol building was laid by President Washington Sept. 18, 1793. The north wing was finished in 1810 and the south wing in 1811, a wooden passageway connecting them. The original designs of the structure were made by Dr. William Thornton. The two wings were burned by the British in 1814, but were immediately restored. In 1827 the original building was completed at a cost of $2,433,844.13. Extensions of the wings were begun in 1851 and completed in 1859. The dome, which is 287 feet 5 inches in height, was completed in 1865. The capitol stands in latitude 38 degrees 53 minutes 20.4 seconds north and longitude 77 degrees 00 minutes 35.7 seconds west from Greenwich. The area covered by the building is 153,112 square feet. Value of building and grounds: Building, $15,000,000; grounds, $10,400,000 total, $25,400,000.

CITIZENSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. (Fourteenth amendment to the constitution.)

All persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are declared to be citizens of the United States. (Sec. 1992, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States. (Sec. 1993, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen. (Sec. 1995, U. S. Revised Statutes.)

Children born in the United States of alien parents are citizens of the United States.

When any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children of such alien may, by complying with the other provisions of this act (June 29, 1906), be naturalized without making any declaration of intention. If a widow files an application for citizenship based on her husband's declaration of intention, the children who are under the age of 21 at the time she is naturalized will be citizens through her naturalization, but if the children are past the age of 21 and were born in a foreign country, it will be necessary for them to file petitions for naturalization in their own right, using their deceased father's declaration of intention, provided they were under the age of 21 at the time of his death.

Children of Chinese parents who are themselves aliens and incapable of becoming naturalized are citizens of the United States.

Children born in the United States of persons engaged in the diplomatic service of foreign governments are not citizens of the United States.

Children born of alien parents on a vessel of a foreign country while within the waters of the United States are not citizens of the United States, but of the country to which the vessel belongs.

Children born of alien parents in the United States have the right to make an election of nationality when they reach their majority.

Minors and children are citizens within the meaning of the term as used in the constitution.

Deserters from the military or naval service of the United States are liable to loss of citizenship.

Any alien being a free white person, an alien of African nativity or of African descent may become an American citizen by complying with the naturalization laws.

"Hereafter no state court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are repealed." (Sec. 14, act of May 6, 1882.)

The courts have held that neither Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiians, Burmese nor Indians can be naturalized.

The naturalization laws apply to women as well as men. An alien woman who marries a citizen, native or naturalized, becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Aliens may become citizens of the United States by treaties with foreign powers, by conquest or by special acts of congress.

In an act approved March 2, 1907, it is provided that any American citizen shall have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign state from which he came, or five years in any other foreign state, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years; provided, however, that such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the department of state may prescribe; and, provided also, that no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war.

Any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein.

Any foreign woman who acquires American citizenship by marriage to an American citizen shall be assumed to retain the same after the termination of the marital relation if she continue to reside in the United States, unless she makes formal renunciation thereof before a court having jurisdiction to naturalize aliens, or, if she resides abroad, she may retain her citizenship by registering as such before a United States consul within one year after the termination of such marital relation.

A child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship of the parent; provided that such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child; and, provided further, that the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

All children born outside the limits of the United States, who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (see above), and who continue to reside outside of the United States, shall, in order to receive the protection of the government, be required, upon reaching the age of 18 years, to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall further be required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who may, under existing law, become a citizen of the United States, who has served or may hereafter serve for one enlistment of not less than four years in the United States navy, naval auxiliary, marine corps or revenue cutter (coast guard) service and received an honorable discharge with recommendation for re-enlistment, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without previous declaration of intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore. (Act of June 30, 1914.)

NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Approved June 29, 1906.

Exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens resident in their districts is conferred upon the United States Circuit and District courts and all courts of record having a seal, a clerk and jurisdiction in actions in law or equity or both in which the amount in controversy is unlimited.

An alien may be admitted to citizenship in the following manner and not otherwise:

1. He shall declare on oath before the clerk of the proper court at least two years before his admission, and after he has reached the age of 18 years, that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States and to renounce allegiance to any foreign state or sovereignty. Such declaration shall set forth the same facts as are registered at the time of his arrival.

2. Not less than two years nor more than seven after he has made such declaration he shall file a petition, signed by himself and verified, in which he shall state his name, place of residence, occupation, date and place of birth, place from which he emigrated, name of the vessel on which he arrived, the time when and the place and name of the court where he declared his intention of becoming a citizen; if he is married, he shall state the name of his wife, the country of her nativity and her place of residence at the time the petition is filed, and if he has children, the name, date and place of birth and place of residence of each child living. The petition shall also set forth that he is not a disbeliever in or opposed to organized government or a member of any body of persons opposed to organized government, and that he is not a polygamist or a believer in polygamy; that he intends to become a citizen of and to live permanently in the United States, and every other fact material to his naturalization and required to be proved upon the final hearing of his application. The petition shall be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses who are citizens. At the time of the filing of the petition there shall be also filed a certificate from the department of commerce and labor stating the date, place and manner of his arrival in the United States and the declaration of intention of such petitioner, which certificate and declaration shall be attached to and be a part of his petition.

3. He shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court that he will support the constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely renounces all allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty.

4. It shall be made apparent to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States five years at least, and within the state or territory where such court is at the time held one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the constitution. In addition to the oath of the applicant, the testimony of at least two witnesses, citizens of the United States, as to the facts of residence, moral character and attachment to the principles of the constitution shall be required.

5. He must renounce any hereditary title or order of nobility which he may possess.

6. When any alien who has declared his intention dies before he is actually naturalized the widow and minor children may, by complying with the other provisions of the act, be naturalized without making any declaration of intention.

Immediately after the filing of the petition the clerk of the court shall give notice thereof by posting in a public place the name, nativity and residence of the alien, the date and place of his arrival in the United States and the date for the final hearing of his petition and the names of the witnesses whom the applicant expects to summon in his behalf. Petitions for naturalization may be filed at any time, but final action thereon shall be had only on stated days and in no case until at least ninety days have elapsed after the filing of the petition. No person shall be naturalized within thirty days preceding a general election within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

No person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers of the government of the United States, or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who is a polygamist, shall be naturalized.

No alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who cannot speak the English language. This requirement does not apply to those physically unable to comply with it, or to those making homestead entries upon the public lands of the United States.

VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

The vice-presidential candidates, who were voted for and who received the same number of ballots as party nominees for president, were: 1900, Theodore Roosevelt, Rep., and Adlai E. Stevenson, Dem.; 1904, Charles W. Fairbanks, Rep., and Henry G. Davis, Dem.; 1908, James S. Sherman, Rep., and John W. Kern, Dem.; 1912, Thomas R. Marshall, Dem., Hiram W. Johnson, Prog., and Nicholas Murray Butler, Rep. In 1912 James S. Sherman, the republican nominee, died just prior to the election and no attempt was made to fill his place. The republican electors cast their eight votes for Nicholas Murray Butler of New York. An informal poll of the members of the republican national committee taken after Mr. Sherman's death showed a strong sentiment for Herbert S. Hadley of Missouri for vice-president, but a meeting of the committee, which had been announced for Nov. 12, was called off by Chairman Charles D. Hilles, and no formal action was ever taken on the subject.

CENTENNIAL OF ADMISSION OF ILLINOIS.

The following resolution was adopted by the Illinois state senate Feb. 20 and concurred in by the house April 8, 1913:

"Whereas, Illinois was admitted to the union of states Dec. 3, 1818, the centennial anniversary thereof being rapidly approaching, and it being meet and fit that the state which has given of its sons so liberally to the progress of the nation and the world during the period of its statehood should fittingly observe its hundredth anniversary by a celebration which shall do honor to itself and to the nation;

"Resolved, by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, That a commission, consisting of five members of the senate and five members of the house of representatives of the forty-eighth general assembly, shall be appointed to have charge of the preliminary arrangements of such celebration to be held in Springfield, the state capital, on such centennial date, and to determine, as may be, the character and necessities of such celebration, and to report the result of its findings to the forty-ninth general assembly; such joint commission to hold its meetings in the city of Springfield at such time or times as may be necessary to successfully inaugurate such movement."

Subsequently by another joint resolution E. J. James, E. B. Greene and J. W. Garner of the University of Illinois and Mrs. Jessie Palmer Webber and Dr. Otto L. Schmidt of the Illinois Historical society were appointed as additional members of the committee. The sum of $10,000 was appropriated to defray the expenses of the commission.

At a meeting held in Springfield July 22 Senator Campbell S. Hearn was elected chairman and Mrs. Jessie Palmer Webber secretary. The following proposals were adopted:

1. Promotion of local celebrations throughout the state.
2. Holding of a state celebration at the capital, consisting of an exposition and a pageant illustrative of the social, economic and educational development of the state.

3. Preparation of a series of publications putting into permanent form the record of the state's progress in all lines of development.

4. Erection of a permanent memorial building for the use of the historical and educational departments of the state, where shall be preserved the historical relics of the state; containing a memorial hall where shall be placed statues of Illinois' illustrious men.

5. Erecting and unveiling of bronze statues of Lincoln and Douglas on the capitol grounds as provided for in bills enacted at the session of the legislature in 1913.

A comprehensive and elaborate plan was presented to the state commission by President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois. His suggestion, similar to that of the commission's, was to have chief celebrations in Springfield, at the University of Illinois, which completed its fiftieth year of organization in 1918, and in Chicago. Lesser celebrations are suggested for the county seats.

The centennial commission as organized in 1915 was as follows:

President—E. S. Smith, Springfield.
Secretary—Mrs. Jessie Palmer Webber, Springfield.

Senators—John Dailey, Peoria; M. B. Bailey, Danville; Edward J. Hughes, Chicago; E. S. Smith, Springfield; Kent E. Keller, Ava.

Representatives—John S. Burns and Thomas Boyer, Chicago; Homer J. Tice, Greenville; John Huston, Blandinsville; William J. Butler, Springfield.

"Historical" Members—President E. J. James, E. B. Greene and J. W. Garner of the state university; Mrs. Jessie Palmer Webber, Springfield, and Dr. Otto L. Schmidt, Chicago.

Provided, That the vote for president of the United States shall be for the sole purpose of securing an expression of the sentiment and will of the party voters with respect to candidates for nomination, and the vote of the state at large shall be taken and considered as advisory to the delegates and alternates at large to the national conventions of the respective political parties; and the vote of the respective congressional districts shall be taken and considered as advisory to the delegates and alternates of the congressional districts to the national conventions of the respective political parties.

Any candidate for president for whom a preference is stated by any candidate for delegate or alternate delegate to a nominating convention may, at any time after the filing of such petition and before the name of such candidate is certified to the various county clerks for printing, file in the office of the secretary of state an instrument in writing disavowing the candidacy of the person who has so filed a nominating petition, and in case such candidate for president shall disavow the candidacy of the candidate for delegate or alternate delegate, the name of such candidate shall not be certified to the various county clerks for printing upon the official primary ballot.

The state convention of each political party shall have power to make nominations of candidates for the electors of president and vice-president of the United States, and for trustees of the University of Illinois, to adopt any party platform and to select delegates and alternates to the national nominating conventions.

GOVERNMENT OF ILLINOIS.

Legislative power is vested in a general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives, both elected by the people. The state is divided into fifty-one senatorial districts, each of which elects a senator and three representatives. The general assembly makes laws and appropriates money for the government of the state and in general stands in the same relation to the state as congress does to each of the states as a whole. The powers and duties of the chief executive officers are as follows:

Governor—The governor is vested with the chief executive power of the state. He is the commander in chief of the military and naval forces and may call out the militia to maintain the peace. He is required to inform the general assembly, by message, of the condition of affairs of the state and to recommend needed legislation. He may, by proclamation, call a special session of the assembly or adjourn it in case of disagreement between the two houses. He has the power to appoint certain officers and during a recess of the senate may fill vacancies or remove certain officers and may call special elections to fill vacancies in certain offices. He may make requisitions upon the governors of other states for the return of fugitives from justice or offer rewards for the arrest of offenders against the laws of the state. He exercises a general supervision over the penitentiaries and may grant reprieves, commutations and pardons and may restore the rights of citizenship to ex-convicts. He may approve acts of the legislature and exercise the veto power.

Lieutenant-Governor—This officer is ex officio president of the senate and has the power to cast the deciding vote in case of a tie. In case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability on the part of the governor, the lieutenant-governor succeeds to the office to the close of the term.

Secretary of State—The secretary of state is charged with the safekeeping of the original laws and resolutions of the general assembly, with all books, bills and documents deposited with him by either house, and with all bonds, records and papers filed in his office. He keeps a record of the official acts of the governor; furnishes certified copies of the same to the assembly on request and certified copies of any of the records of his office on the payment of the statutory fees. He countersigns and affixes the seal of the state to all proclamations and commissions issued by the governor; issues licenses for incorporations and certificates of organization to cities and villages and incorporated towns. He has charge of most of the buildings and grounds belonging to the state in Springfield, furnishes supplies for the general assembly and supervises the printing and distribution of all the public documents of the state. He calls the house of representatives to order at the beginning of each general assembly and presides over the same until the election of a speaker. He is the keeper of the great seal of the state and is the custodian and sealer of weights and measures.

Auditor—The auditor is required to keep all the accounts of the state; to audit the accounts of all officers or other persons authorized to receive moneys from the state treasury; to personally sign all warrants drawn on the treasury; to institute suits wherein the state is a plaintiff, and to make a biennial report of the business of his office to the governor. With the governor and treasurer he determines the state tax rate. He exercises a general supervision over state banks, building, loan and homestead associations.

State Treasurer—The state treasurer is custodian of the revenues and public moneys of the state. He must make monthly settlements with the auditor and a biennial report to the governor.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—The superintendent exercises a general supervision over all the public schools of the state. He is the general and legal adviser of the county superintendents and must report biennially to the governor the general condition of all the schools of the state, the amount raised by taxation for school purposes and the manner of its expenditure and the general condition of all the school funds. He may grant state certificates to teachers or cause them to be withheld and must visit charitable institutions which are educational in character.

Attorney-General—It is the duty of the attorney-general to represent the state in the Supreme court in all cases in which the state is interested; to act as counsel for all state officials; to be the legal adviser of the governor and other state officers in matters relating to their official duties, and, on request, to furnish them, as well as either branch of the general assembly, with written opinions upon constitutional or legal questions.

OCCUPATIONAL POPULATION OF LOOP DISTRICT.

Realizing the public interest in the loop district, with its problem of transportation and congested population, school census enumerators visited the skyscrapers and all buildings in that portion of the 1st ward bounded by Polk street on the south, by the lake on the east and by the river on the north and west. It is generally known as the "loop district"—the business heart of Chicago. It was found that the district in May, 1914, contained 18,602 tenants in buildings and that 174,680 males and 78,308 females—a total of 252,988—constituted the total occupational population in this busiest spot in the life of Chicago. This new feature of the census presents the first complete and up to date statistics on this subject—canvassed personally by school census enumerators and verified by employers and managers. These are not the residents of the district. They are employed, however, or have occupations, every day, within the loop. The apportionment of this occupational population in the loop portion of the 1st ward is as follows:

SUBURBANITES WITH OCCUPATIONS IN CHICAGO.

Thousands of men and women whose daily vocational life is spent in Chicago live in the suburbs within the ten to twenty mile zone. Maywood and Oak Park are just over the border line. Evanston, Wilmette, Berwyn, Riverside, LaGrange, Hinsdale, Western Springs, Blue Island, Harvey and other adjacent towns are residential preferences for the suburbanite whose daily employment is in Chicago.

With the co-operation of the railway companies, the surface lines and elevated railway companies, it was officially ascertained by the director of the school census, on the basis of sales of tickets within this zone (commutation and monthly ride tickets and individual fares) and estimates by ticket agents of daily patrons who had occupations in the city, that 95,798 persons could be classified as the portion of the occupational population of Chicago that lived in the immediate vicinity of the city. This does not include the total population of the suburbs named, but merely that portion of their townspeople who earn their livelihood in Chicago.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

The births reported in 1912 were 43,010; in 1913 the number was 50,044, and in 1914 (four months), 19,785, a total of 112,839 births reported from January, 1912, to May 4, 1914. The total deaths in the city (all ages) during the comparative period were 82,158, leaving an excess of 30,681 births reported during the time named.

EPILEPTICS, CRIPPLES, DEAF AND DUMB, BLIND.

May 4, 1914, there were in Chicago, according to the school census, 301 epileptics under 21 years of age; 692 cripples, 201 of whom were eligible for transportation to crippled children's centers; 570 deaf and 218 mute children and 225 blind children or children having visual defects leading to blindness.

ILLITERATE MINORS.

The number of illiterate minors in Chicago, more than 16 and under 21 years, was 636 May 4, 1914.

TEACHERS IN CHICAGO SCHOOLS.

The number of teachers in Chicago May 4, 1914, was: Public schools, 7,544 (748 men and 6,796 women); private parochial schools, 1,883 (244 men and 1,639 women).

BUSINESS COLLEGES, ETC.

In the business colleges, private law, medical and other professional and technical educational institutions there were May 4, 1914, 30,108 pupils and 1,627 teachers, of whom 994 were men and 633 women.

LOCAL GOVERNMENTS WITHIN CHICAGO.

[From report of Chicago Bureau of Public Efficiency.]

There are twenty-two distinct governing agencies in the territory that Chicago comprises, most of them absolutely independent of one another. They are:

City of Chicago.
Board of education.
Library board.
Municipal tuberculosis sanitarium.
Cook county.
Sanitary district of Chicago.
South park commissioners.
West Chicago park commissioners.
Lincoln park commissioners.
Ridge avenue park commissioners.
North shore park commissioners.
Calumet park commissioners.
Fernwood park commissioners.
Ridge park commissioners.
Irving park commissioners.
Northwest park commissioners.
Old Portage park commissioners.

Edison park commissioners.
West Pullman park commissioners.
Ravenswood Manor-Gardens park commissioners.
River park commissioners.
Commissioners of the first park district of the city of Evanston.

The board of education, the library board and the tuberculosis sanitarium, while having their separate tax levies, are subject to a degree to control by the mayor and city council. The other bodies named are independent of one another. The state public utilities commission, though not a taxing body, is, in a sense, another governmental agency in the city.

If account were taken of the eight towns lying wholly within the city of Chicago (Lake View, North Chicago, Jefferson, West Chicago, South Chicago, Hyde Park, Lake and Evanston), which still have legal existence, the number of governing bodies comprised in the city would be thirty, instead of twenty-two.

GREAT LAKES NAVAL TRAINING STATION.

North Chicago, Ill.

The great lakes naval training station at North Chicago, Ill., was placed in commission July 1, 1911, and the work of fitting young men for service in the enlisted force of the United States navy was begun.

Enlistment—The term of enlistment is four years, except minors under 18 years of age, who are enlisted for the period of minority. Only such persons are enlisted as can be reasonably expected to remain in the service, and when enlisted they must serve out the term specified. The age limit is 17 to 35 years.

Physical Requirements—For a minor enlisting as an apprentice seaman the following minimum heights (barefooted) and weights (without clothes) are required:

Age.	Height.	Weight.
17.....	62 inches.	110 pounds
18.....	64 inches.	115 pounds
19.....	64 inches.	120 pounds
20.....	64 inches.	125 pounds

Any one of the following conditions will be sufficient to cause the rejection of an applicant: Feeble constitution, general poor physique or impaired general health; any disease or deformity, either congenital or acquired, that would impair efficiency; any acute disease.

Mental Requirements—Applicants for enlistment must be able to read and write English.

Other Requirements—Applicants for enlistment must be American citizens, native or naturalized. A minor must present a certificate of birth or verified written statement by his parents, or either of them, or in case of their death a similar statement by his legal guardian, showing the applicant to be of the age required by the navy regulations.

Pay—The pay of apprentice seamen is $17.60 per month. Each enlisted man is furnished with a free outfit of clothing, amounting to $90, on first enlistment.

How to Enlist—Any one who wishes to enlist in the navy should write to the bureau of navigation, navy department, Washington, D. C., stating such desire, and the bureau will immediately reply, giving the address of the nearest recruiting station, where applicants are examined physically and either accepted or rejected. The government pays the expenses from the point of enlistment to the training station, but not to the recruiting station.

There are similar training stations at Narragansett bay, R. I., and San Francisco, Cal.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

The Chicago public library is a free public institution, established under the Illinois library law of 1872. It derives its revenue from an annual library tax of approximately six-tenths of a mill. A board of directors of nine members is appointed by the mayor, three annually for terms of three years. The library occupies the site formerly known as Dearborn park, bounded by Michigan avenue, Washington street, Garland court and Randolph street. The cost of the building was about $2,000,000, including the furniture, book stacks and machinery. There are thirty-three branches and 109 delivery stations.

The right of drawing books from the public library belongs to all who reside in the city of Chicago, and also to those who make their homes in the suburbs within the limits of Cook county and are regularly employed in the city. In order to become a book borrower it is necessary only to file an application giving the name and residence of the applicant and bearing the signature of a second person, who must be an actual resident of the city, appearing as such in the latest city directory. This person becomes the guarantor to the library for the proper observance of the library regulations on the part of the applicant. These regulations merely provide that books drawn for home use must be returned within the stated period and must not be defaced or injured.

At the close of May 31, 1915, the public library contained 627,619 volumes. The aggregate circulation for the year ending May 31, 1915, was 4,326,057 volumes, which does not include the use of books kept on the open shelves at the main library or its branches or the periodicals or newspapers used in the reading rooms. This use would bring the total recorded book issue to 5,302,911.

CHICAGO TUBERCULOSIS SANITARIUM.

North Crawford and Bryn Mawr Avenues.

The Chicago Municipal Tuberculosis sanitarium was established in accordance with the provisions of an act of the state legislature, approved March 7, 1908. A proposal for the levying of an annual tax of 1 mill on the dollar for such an institution was submitted to the voters of Chicago at the election of April 6, 1909, and was carried by a vote of 168,716 yeas to 39,237 nays. A site for the sanitarium was bought in February, 1911, at a cost of $150,000. It consists of 160 acres located within the city limits at the intersection of North Crawford and Bryn Mawr avenues on the northwest side. Up to the time of the dedication of the institution, Feb. 16, 1915, thirty-two buildings, including administration headquarters, an infirmary and concrete cottages for men and women, had been erected at a cost of $2,400,000. When the sanitarium was opened, March 9 of the same year, 650 beds for patients were available; the ultimate capacity is to be 950 beds, of which 650 will be for ambulant patients, 240 for children and 300 for infirmary patients.

The sanitarium is free to residents of Chicago. Patients are admitted only after the necessary examination has been made at one of the municipal tuberculosis dispensaries. These in 1915 were as follows:

North side—Chicago Polyclinic, 221 West Chicago avenue; Tuesdays and Fridays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.

South side—Postgraduate, 2400 Dearborn street; Tuesdays and Thursdays, 10 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 10 a. m. to 12 m. Grand Crossing, 942 East 75th street; Mondays and Thursdays, 2 to 5 p. m. Provident, 57 West 36th street; Mondays and Thursdays, 2:30 to 5:30 p. m. Stockyards, 738 West 47th street; Tuesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.

West Side dispensary, Maxwell and Miller streets; Mondays and Tuesdays, 2 to 5 p. m.; Thursdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m.; children's clinic, Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Southwest, 2406 West 22d street; Mondays and Thursdays, 1 to 4 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 1 to 3 p. m.; evening clinic, Thursdays, 7 to 9.

For the present only persons afflicted with tuberculosis in its curable stages are received at the sanitarium; others are cared for at the Oak Forest infirmary. Provision is made for extending the benefits of the institution into the homes of those suffering from the malady and nurses, instruction, medicines and attendance are furnished under proper rules and regulations.

The management of the affairs of the institution is vested in a board of three directors appointed by the mayor. It consisted, when the sanitarium was opened, of Theodore B. Sachs, M. D., president; George B. Young, M. D., secretary, and W. A. Wieboldt. The board, as originally constituted in 1909, was Harlow N. Higginbotham, president; Theodore B. Sachs, M. D., secretary, and William A. Evans, M. D. The board maintains a general office at 105 West Monroe street, where all the business affairs of the various departments are transacted. Frank E. Wing is the administrative secretary and J. W. Coon, M. D., is the superintendent and medical director of the sanitarium.

The revenue of the sanitarium from the 1 mill tax, used for the construction of the buildings and the maintenance of the institution and its auxiliaries, has been as follows:

The Art Institute of Chicago was incorporated May 24, 1879, for the "founding and maintenance of schools of art and design, the formation and exhibition of collections of objects of art and the cultivation and extension of the arts of design by any appropriate means." The museum building upon the lake front, first occupied in 1893, has never been closed for a day. It is open to the public every weekday from 9 to 6, Sundays from 12:15 to 10 p. m. Admission is free to members and their families at all times, and free to all upon Wednesdays, Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays. Upon other days the entrance fee is 25 cents.

All friends of art are invited to become members. Annual members pay a fee of $10 a year. Life members pay $100 and are thenceforth exempt from dues. Governing members are elected by the trustees and pay $100 upon election and $25 a year thereafter. Upon the payment of $400 governing members become governing life members and are thenceforth exempt from dues. All receipts from life memberships are invested and the income only expended. All members are entitled, with their families and visiting friends, to admission to all exhibitions, receptions, public lectures and entertainments given by the Art Institute and to the use of the Ryerson reference library of art. Visitors desiring to see the collections under guidance may make appointments with the museum instructors at the office of the director.

MUSEUM.

The Art museum now ranks among the first three or four in the country. It contains excellent examples of the old masters and of the modern painters. There is also a large and comprehensive collection of sculptures, including reproductions of the work of the greatest sculptors, ancient and modern. There is an extensive collection of architectural casts. Other fields of art are represented by collections of ethnics, engravings, textiles, oriental art, Egyptian and classical antiquities, etc. There is a constant succession of passing exhibitions, thirty-five or more in a year. All students enjoy the full use of the collections and the library. The number of visitors to the museum during the year ended June 1, 1914, was 861,267.

The school of instruction in the practice and theory of art includes departments of painting, sculpture, decorative designing, illustration, architecture and normal instruction. There are day and evening classes for beginners and for advanced pupils and special classes on Saturdays. The instructors number about eighty and the pupils average about 3,000 a year. The principle upon which the school is founded is to maintain in the highest efficiency the severe practice of academic drawing and painting, from life, from the antique and from objects, and around this practice, as a living stem, to group the various departments of art education.

The school is conducted upon the most modern methods and has grown to be the most comprehensive and probably the largest fine arts school in the United States. Constant communication and interchange are kept up with European art centers and distinguished teachers from a distance are called in from time to time. Students may enter at any time. The tuition rates are as follows:

Day School—Registration fee, $5; full time for full term of twelve weeks, $80; four weeks, $12; four days a week, full term, $27; four weeks, $11; three days a week, full term, $24; four weeks, $9; two days a week, full term, $18; four weeks, $7; one day a week, full term, $12; four weeks, $5.

FIELD MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY.

President—Stanley Field.

Vice-Presidents—Martin A. Ryerson, Watson F. Blair.

Director of the Museum and Secretary—Frederick J. V. Skiff.

Treasurer—Solomon A. Smith.

Assistant Secretary and Recorder—D. C. Davies.

The Field Museum of Natural History, established in 1894 at the close of the World's Columbian exposition of 1893, occupies the temporary building erected for fine arts in Jackson park, the exposition site. The founding of a scientific institution of this character in Chicago was made possible by the gift of $1,000,000 by Marshall Field, who on his death (Jan. 16, 1906) bequeathed the institution a further $3,000,000, $4,000,000 for the erection of a permanent building and $4,600,000 for endowment. In addition $1,200,000 has been donated by other individuals and there is an annual income from other sources than endowment of about $25,000. The citizens of Chicago have confirmed legislative provision for the levy of a tax for the maintenance of the museum when a new building shall have been erected, which it is estimated will eventually produce approximately $100,000 per annum.

Plans have been completed and erection has begun of a new building for the museum near and south of 12th street extended in an easterly direction. The architecture of this building will be ornamental and dignified in character, as befits its location in a public park. The general architecture of the present building in Jackson park has been retained as well as the beautiful effect of the colonnade structure.

The nucleus of the exhibition material was gathered by gift and purchase at the World's Columbian exposition. Most of this material, however, has since been rearranged, readapted or discarded. Several departments created at the organization have been abandoned, until, after the lapse of twenty years and the expenditure of approximately $6,000,000, the museum is now divided into four departments—namely, anthropology, botany, geology and zoology. Many expeditions for the purpose of obtaining study, exhibition and exchange material and data have been dispatched to all parts of North America and to different countries. The results of these expeditions, investigations and researches have been published by the museum from time to time, which publications have been distributed to kindred societies and institutions both at home and abroad. Two courses of free lectures are given annually. An important contribution of $250,000 by Norman W. Harris was announced in December, 1911, for the extension of the work of the museum into the public schools of Chicago. The plans for carrying out Mr. Harris' wishes were placed in operation in the spring of 1912. The museum has a working library of about 67,000 titles, an extensive exchange system, fully equipped departmental laboratories, a herbarium of 286,000 sheets, study collections in mammals and birds reaching many thousand specimens, a large two story taxidermy section, a well equipped printing shop, illustration studios and assaying and lapidary rooms. In North American ethnology, in the world's mineralogy, in economic botany the museum is particularly prominent, while its series of mounted mammals furnishes examples of advanced museum methods. The present main building covers nine acres and is open to the public on all days except Christmas and Thanksgiving. An admission fee of 25 cents is charged except on Saturdays and Sundays, when admission is free to all. Students, scholars and teachers are admitted free on all days between 9 a. m. and 4 p. m.

The museum is incorporated under state law and the administrative control rests in a board of trustees with president, secretary, etc. The executive of the museum is the director, under whom there are four head curators with divisional assistant curators, preparators, etc. The entire museum records, the accessions system, the historical files, publications and supplies are in charge of a recorder.

MUSIC IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Founded by Theodore Thomas.

The Theodore Thomas orchestra was organized in Chicago in 1890-1891 by a number of men interested in promoting the highest class of instrumental music. The Orchestral association was incorporated Dec. 18, 1890, and Theodore Thomas, famous for many years as a conductor, was engaged to lead the new organization, which was then named the Chicago orchestra. The preparations were completed in 1891 and the first public rehearsal was given at the Auditorium Friday afternoon, Oct. 16, of that year. Financially the result of the first season was discouraging, the fifty or more gentlemen guaranteeing the expenses being compelled to meet a deficit of about $53,000. Receipts, however, continued to increase from year to year until the orchestra was finally placed on a permanent basis. This was accomplished when Orchestra hall, erected by subscriptions from more than 8,000 persons, was erected at 220 South Michigan avenue, and the organization was provided with a home of its own. The first concert there was given Wednesday evening, Dec. 14, 1904. Theodore Thomas died Jan. 4, 1905, and the orchestra, which until then had been called the Chicago orchestra, was named the Theodore Thomas orchestra. Feb. 24, 1913, the title was changed to the Chicago Symphony orchestra (founded by Theodore Thomas). Frederick Stock, after the death of Mr. Thomas, was made conductor, a position he still holds. The plan of giving two performances a week—a public rehearsal on Friday afternoon and a concert on Saturday evening—has been followed from the beginning. The season consists of twenty-eight weeks, beginning in October and ending in April.

The first officers of the Orchestral association were: N. K. Fairbank, president; C. Norman Fay, vice-president; P. A. McEwan, treasurer and secretary; Milward Adams, manager.

CHICAGO'S BRIDGE SYSTEM.

The first ferry across the river was established in 1829, where the Lake street bridge now is. In 1833 a floating bridge of logs was in operation just north of the present Randolph street bridge.

A foot bridge over the north branch was built in 1832 at Kinzie street. The first drawbridge over the main branch of the river was placed at Dearborn street in 1834. In 1854 a pivot bridge was built at Clark street. These and other bridges of that time were built by the persons most directly benefited by them. It was not until 1857 that a bridge was built entirely at the city's expense. This was the structure over the south branch at Madison street. It cost $30,000. Until 1872 the swing bridges were turned by hand, but in the year named steam power was installed on the Dearborn street structure and later on most of the other bridges in the downtown section were similarly equipped. In 1895 the Rush, Lake and Van Buren street bridges were operated by electric motors. The last named structure, which was opened for traffic in that year, was the first of the Scherzer rolling type. The Halsted street lift bridge, the first and only one of its kind, was opened in 1894 and was operated by steam. It cost the city $242,880.

In 1915 Chicago had fifty bridges with movable spans and twenty-five with fixed spans. There were also thirty-six viaducts and seven foot bridges. Most of the movable bridges are operated by electricity. The bridges and viaducts had a plant value of more than $6,500,000.

MUNICIPAL PIER AND OUTER HARBOR.

HEADHOUSE AT LAND END OF MUNICIPAL PIER.

Four outer harbor sites along Chicago's lake front were established by the city council Nov. 20, 1911. The ordinances provided for the following districts:

No. 1—From the mouth of the Chicago river north to Chicago avenue and extending one mile into Lake Michigan.

No. 2—From the mouth of the Chicago river south to Randolph street and extending one mile into the lake.

No. 3—From the south end of Grant park south to 31st street and extending one mile into the lake.

No. 4—All of the Calumet river within the city and all of Lake Calumet.

Feb. 7, 1912, the harbor and subway commission submitted to the council committee on harbors, wharves and bridges preliminary plans and drawings for the initial development of "outer harbor district No. 1." In this report the commission stated that it had proceeded on the theory that joint and parallel action by the federal government would be taken to protect the initial piers recommended by the construction of an adequate outer breakwater. The plan proposed by the commission provided for the construction of five piers extending eastward from the shore line between the mouth of the Chicago river and Chicago avenue, with a uniform length for four piers of 2,500 feet and one pier of 3,000 feet. At the election of April 3, 1912, a proposition to issue $5,000,000 in bonds for harbor construction was approved by popular vote. It was found, however, that the O'Connor harbor act contained a provision prohibiting the city from acquiring title to property along the lake shore line where it has been filled in or where the riparian rights were in dispute. The harbor law was re-enacted in amended form in June, 1913, by the legislature and in August of the same year land along the lake shore between Illinois and Ohio streets was acquired for $300,000, and arrangements for building the first pier were made at once. Contracts were let and work was actually begun March 16, 1914. The pier, which is intended for freight, passenger and recreation purposes, was practically completed near the close of 1915, so as to be ready for use in 1916.

The pier extends 3,000 feet into the lake from the foot of Grand avenue. It rests on a foundation of concrete and piling, the superstructures being of brick and steel. The headhouse, as the building at the shore end of the pier is called, contains the administration offices and the entrances to the two freight and passenger buildings. Each of these is two stories in height, 2,340 feet long and 100 feet in width. The upper story is for passengers and the lower for freight. Between these buildings, which stand parallel to each other, is a roadway eighty feet in width. Between each building and the outer line of the dock is a six-foot dock. The total width of the pier is 292 feet. On the outer end is a recreation building, 665 feet long, containing a dance and concert hall, restaurant and other features of entertainment.

The total cost of the pier was approximately $3,400,000, not including engineering and inspection, subdivided as follows:

Headhouse	125,817
Freight and passenger buildings.....	1,091,800
Recreation building	604,436
Plumbing, gas, sewerage.....	68,727
Sprinkling system	99,405
Electrical installation	125,000
Street car line extension.....	35,000

3,400,185

The pier is municipally owned and operated.

by about the same amount in 1857 and 1872, making the present level fourteen feet above "city datum," which is the low-water mark of the lake in 1847.

HOUSE NUMBER SYSTEM IN CHICAGO.

The present house number system in Chicago was established by an ordinance passed June 22, 1908, and effective Sept. 1, 1909. This applied to all streets except those between the river, 12th street and the lake. Sept. 20, 1910, the city council passed an amendment to the ordinance making it applicable to the entire city. The change in the business district went into effect April 1, 1911. The system is laid out on two base lines, State street dividing the east and west streets and Madison street the north and south streets. Numbers are assigned on the basis of 800 to the mile or 100 to the prevailing block of 660 feet or one-eighth of a mile.

The races for the America cup having been postponed at the request of the challenger on account of the war in Europe, in which his country was a participant, the Columbia Yacht club deemed it an act of courtesy to postpone the Lipton cup contest likewise.

MOTORING.

As in years past, Chicago wielded a facile pen in the writing of motor contest history during 1915, the western metropolis and its environs being the scene of several events of national importance.

The construction of the two-mile speedway at Maywood, ten miles west of the heart of the loop, and the two races held on the board track featured the local season. The inaugural event was a 500-mile contest on June 26, when Dario Resta, driving a French Peugeot, established a new world's record of 97 miles an hour for the distance. In August Resta, Burman, Cooper and Oldfield met in a 100-mile race and again Resta was returned victor. His average was 101 miles an hour, the first time in America that 100 miles had been crowded into 60 minutes.

The Chicago Automobile club again promoted the annual road races over the Elgin course. Both were victories for the Stutz, Gil Anderson winning the Elgin trophy and Earl Cooper the C. A. C. cup. Faster time was made than ever before, although threatening skies cut down the attendance.

Two interclub reliability runs were held. In the annual spring match, a two-day tour to Fort Wayne and return, the Chicago Automobile club defeated the Chicago Athletic association, but in the fall match the Cherry Circle drivers had revenge, getting the fewest number of penalizations and capturing the Mayor Thompson cup. The C. A. C. team, however, had the most perfect scores and took the Mudd trophy. The South Shore Country club participated in this run for the first time.

The innovation of the year was the Chicago Automobile club master drivers' run, a three-day tour to Peoria and Davenport, which was won by E. A. Turner with a Mercer. This was the most arduous match ever held in this city, the rules being very drastic and penalties severe.

In July E. C. Patterson of Chicago established a new Chicago-New York record, driving a Packard the 1,004 miles in 35 hours and 43 minutes and bettering the mark of 39 hours and 53 minutes established by a Franklin in 1907.

CONSTITUTIONAL TAX AMENDMENT.

Resolved, by the senate of the state of Illinois, the house of representatives concurring therein, that there shall be submitted to the electors of this state for adoption or rejection at the next election of the members of the general assembly of the state of Illinois, in manner provided by law, a proposition to amend article IX. of the constitution by adding thereto an additional section to be known as section 14 of article IX., as follows:

Article IX., Sec. 14. From and after the date when this section shall be in force the powers of the general assembly over the subject matter of the taxation of personal property shall be as complete and unrestricted as they would be if sections one (1), three (3), nine (9) and ten (10), of this article of the constitution did not exist: Provided, however, that any tax levied upon personal property must be uniform as to persons and property of the same class within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same, and all exemptions from taxation shall be by general law and shall be revocable by the general assembly at any time.

Adopted by the senate by two-thirds vote May 18, 1915.

Concurred in by the house by two-thirds vote May 20, 1915.

Following are the sections referred to in the resolution:

1. The general assembly shall provide such revenue as may be needful by levying a tax, by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons to be elected or appointed in such manner as the general assembly shall direct and not otherwise; but the general assembly shall have power to tax peddlers, auctioneers, brokers, hawkers, merchants, commission merchants, showmen, jugglers, innkeepers, liquor dealers, toll bridges, ferries, insurance, telegraph, express interests or business, vendors of patents and persons and corporations owning or using franchises and privileges in such manner as it shall from time to time direct by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates.

3. The property of the state, counties and other municipal corporations, both real and personal, and such other property as may be used exclusively for agricultural and horticultural societies, for school, religious, cemetery and charitable purposes shall be exempted from taxation. Such exemption shall be only by general law. In the assessment of real estate incumbered by public easement, any depreciation occasioned by such easement may be deducted in the valuation of such property.

9. The general assembly may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessment or by special taxation of contiguous property or otherwise. For all other corporate purposes all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes, but such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same.

10. The general assembly shall not impose taxes upon municipal corporations or the inhabitants or property thereof, for corporate purposes, but shall require that all taxable property within the limits of municipal corporations shall be taxed for the payment of debts contracted under authority of law, such taxes to be uniform in respect to persons and property, within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same. Private property shall not be liable to be taken or sold for the corporate debts of a municipal corporation.

ILLINOIS WATERWAY.

There shall be constructed by the state of Illinois as soon as practicable a deep waterway or canal to be known as the Illinois waterway from the water power plant of the Sanitary district of Chicago at Lockport to the Illinois river at Utica. There shall be erected power plants, locks, bridges, dams and appliances for the development and utilization of the water power of the waterway, and the cost shall be paid out of the proceeds of bonds of the state of Illinois. The construction, management and operation of the waterway or canal, power plants, locks, bridges, dams and appliances shall be under the control of a board of five commissioners (at least one of whom shall be a civil engineer), to be known as the Illinois waterway commission; no more than three of the commissioners shall belong to or be affiliated with the same political party.

The commissioners shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. Of the commissioners first appointed, two shall hold office until the first day of July in the year 1917, two shall hold office until the first day of July in the year 1919, and one shall hold office until the first day of July in the year 1921. The successors in office of the commissioners first appointed shall also be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and each successor in office thus appointed shall hold office for a term of six years from the date of the expiration of the term of his predecessor and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified.

The commission may, with the approval of the governor, appoint a secretary, a chief engineer, an attorney, and such additional accountants, engineers, experts, inspectors and other employes as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. The commission shall each year select one of their number to act as the treasurer of the commission, and the total bond of the member acting as such shall be $75,000.

Each of the commissioners shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. That one of the commissioners who shall be designated as chairman of the commission shall in addition receive the further sum of $1,000 a year, making his salary $6,000 so long as he shall be chairman.

The minimum depth of the waterway is fixed at eight feet, while the bottom and surface widths vary in different sections, according to conditions. For the purpose of defraying all expenditures of the commission, there are appropriated to the Illinois waterway commission the following sums:

For channel excavation and dredging.....	$1,240,200
For locks and dams.....	1,404,550
For right of way and damage to land.....	318,250
For levees, land filling, road work, bridges, sewers and drains.....	437,000
For power and electrical equipment.....	1,000,000
For office expenses, salaries and other administrative and contingent expenses.....	600,000

Total 5,000,000
For the raising of this sum bonds of the state of Illinois to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 shall be issued as authorized by a constitutional amendment in 1903 and sold. The commission shall have power to develop and lease any water power created by the water passing through the canal.

When the waterway shall have been completed and paid for with the proceeds of bonds, and the bonds shall have been paid either out of the earnings of the waterway or by the state, or both, then the channel, or so much thereof as shall have been completed, shall be tendered to the government of the United States for navigation uses, conditioned upon the agreement of the government to maintain the channel as a waterway free from tolls for navigation and to operate and maintain the locks free of cost to the state of Illinois. (Approved June 18, 1915.)

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AMONG ANIMALS.

It shall be the duty of the board of live stock commissioners to cause to be investigated any and all cases or alleged cases of communicable diseases among domestic animals within this state, and to use all proper means to prevent the spread of such diseases, and to provide for the extirpation thereof. If such diseases shall be found to be dangerously contagious or infectious, the board or any member thereof, or the state veterinarian, or any assistant state veterinarian, shall order such diseased animals, and such as have been exposed to contagion, and the premises in or on which they are or which may have been recently occupied by them, to be strictly quarantined. When the board, upon the written report of the state veterinarian or any of his assistants, determines that any animal is affected with or has been exposed to any dangerously contagious or infectious disease, the board or any member thereof, or any of its duly authorized agents, may agree with the owner upon the value of such animal or of any property that it may be found necessary to destroy, and in case such an agreement cannot be made, said animals or property shall be appraised by three competent and disinterested appraisers, one to be selected by the state board of live stock commissioners, one by the claimant and one by the two appraisers thus selected. Upon such appraisal being made, it shall become the duty of the owner to immediately destroy such animals and to dispose of the carcasses thereof, and to disinfect the premises occupied by such animals, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the board. And upon his failure so to do the board, or any member thereof, shall cause such animal or animals or property to be destroyed and disposed of, and thereupon such owner shall forfeit all right to receive any compensation for the destruction of such animal or animals or property.

All claims against the state arising from the slaughter of animals shall be made to the board of live stock commissioners under such rules, not inconsistent with this act, as they may prescribe and it shall be the duty of the board to determine the amount which shall be paid in each case on account of the animals so slaughtered, and fix the fair cash value thereof in health if of the bovine species, for beef, dairy and breeding purposes, in no event to exceed $300 for any registered animal and not to exceed $150 for any animal not registered; nor to exceed an average value of $250 per head for all registered animals in any herd and not to exceed an average value of $125 per head for all nonregistered animals in any herd, or if of the equine species, their fair cash market value in health, in no event to exceed $250 for any one animal, nor to exceed an average value of $200 per head for all such animals of any herd, or if sheep or swine, their fair cash market value in health for meat or breeding purposes, in no event to exceed $50 for any one animal, nor to exceed an average value of $40 per head for all such animals of any flock or herd, upon such inspection, hearing and inquiry as to the value of said animals as the said appraisers shall deem necessary for that purpose: Provided, that where federal authority authorizes the payment of part of the value of such animals the state shall only pay the balance of said appraisal fixed as aforesaid. (Approved June 22, 1915.)

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE CLAIMS.

Whereas, a contagious and infectious disease known as foot and mouth disease, to which cattle, sheep, other ruminants and swine are highly susceptible, has been prevalent in Illinois (as well as many other states) since Nov. 1, 1914, and

Whereas, the fact has been determined that the only effective means of eradicating said disease is by the slaughter of all animals affected with or known to have been exposed to the contagion thereof, and

Whereas, in order to protect the live stock interests within the state, as well as those of the country at large, many residents of the state have been compelled to subject cattle, sheep and swine to slaughter in order to facilitate the complete eradication of foot and mouth disease within the state, and

Whereas, the United States government has paid or provided for the payment of fifty per cent of the losses sustained on account of the slaughter of such live stock and it is just and equitable that the state should contribute a like amount to such loss; therefore,

Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in the general assembly: That the sum of $975,563.48, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, be, and the same hereby is appropriated, to reimburse and pay one-half of the appraised value of live stock slaughtered for the suppression of the foot and mouth disease, in accordance with the report of the state board of live stock commissioners of the state of Illinois and the bureau of animal industry of the United States. (Approved May 20, 1915.)

[Three other bills, one appropriating $104,609.17, one $124,124.97, and one $100,000 for the payment of claims for slaughtered animals in the campaign against the hoof and mouth disease were passed. The total amount appropriated was therefore $1,304,297.62.]

CONSOLIDATION OF LOCAL GOVERNMENTS IN CHICAGO.

All powers and functions not specifically abrogated by this act which are now vested in the city, town, township, park, park district or other local governments and authorities having jurisdiction confined to or within the territory of the city of Chicago, or any part thereof, shall be vested and consolidated in the municipal government of the city of Chicago, and for that purpose all municipal corporations and quasi-municipal corporations other than the city of Chicago whose jurisdiction is confined as aforesaid, and their corporate authorities, shall be dissolved and shall be consolidated with the city of Chicago, except that towns or townships shall be deemed to continue in existence only in so far as their continued existence may be necessary to the collection of taxes. No town or park district shall hereafter be formed under general laws now in force so as to be located entirely or partly within the limits of the city of Chicago. The present park commissioners, boards of park commissioners and park boards shall continue to perform their official functions until the appointment of the board of park commissioners hereinafter provided for; and the present board of directors of the public library and board of inspectors of the house of correction shall continue to perform their official functions until the city council of Chicago shall provide for the government and control of such library and house of correction respectively.

PARK CONSOLIDATION.

Within thirty days after the adoption of this act a board of park commissioners, consisting of nine members, shall be appointed by the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the city council. Three of the members of the board of park commissioners shall be residents of that portion of the city lying north of the Chicago river; three members shall be residents of that portion of the city lying south of the Chicago river, and the three remaining members shall be residents of that portion of the city lying west of the north and south branches of the Chicago river, at the time of their appointment and during their term of office. Of the commissioners first appointed, one of the members from each of said portions of the city shall be appointed for a term of two years, another for a term of four years and the third for a term of six years, and upon the expiration of the term of each member his successor shall be appointed for a term of six years. The park commissioners shall serve without compensation, and no park commissioner shall at the same time hold any other office under the city government. The board of park commissioners so appointed shall elect a president from their own number who shall hold office for a term of one year. Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to or to affect in any manner the sanitary drainage or improvement districts or public tuberculosis sanitarium or the board of education of the city of Chicago.

The offices of all officers of all towns or townships, parks or park districts, or other local governments and authorities hereby consolidated, are hereby abrogated and abolished, except as herein otherwise expressly provided. All officers and employees included in and subject to the civil service laws relating to any of the local governments and authorities hereby consolidated with the city of Chicago and all other officers and employees (excepting all elective officers, general superintendents, attorneys and secretaries) employed by local governments and authorities not under civil service law who have served for at least six months prior to the passage of this act by the general assembly and who would, if employees of the city of Chicago, be included in and subject to the civil service laws relating to said city, shall be transferred to and without examination shall become officers and employees of the city of Chicago, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws relating to the city.

The city of Chicago shall be vested with all the powers heretofore granted to the park commissioners. The city council shall have power to extend the park system of the city of Chicago, both within and outside of the city limits, by adding to or otherwise enlarging any parks and by opening and establishing new parks.

The city council, upon the recommendation of the board of park commissioners, shall have the power to set apart any street or streets of the city or any portion thereof for a boulevard or driveway and shall also have the power, upon such recommendation, to discontinue the use of such streets or any part thereof as boulevards and resume control over them as city streets.

The city council may purchase, erect and maintain within any public park, any museum, art institute or library, or permit any museum, art institute or library established for public use by private endowment to be erected and maintained therein. An admission fee, not to exceed 25 cents for each visitor over 10 years of age, may be charged or permitted to be charged for visiting any such museum or art institute: Provided, that all such museums and institutes shall be open to the public without charge for not less than three days each week, and to the children in actual attendance upon any of the schools in the city on every day.

The board of park commissioners shall have charge and control of all public monuments within the city and the city council may establish, by ordinance, all needful rules and regulations tending to the preservation of such public monuments and to prevent their defacement, in the same manner and with the same effect as it may make ordinances for the protection of the public parks.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The city council shall have full power to manage, control, maintain, operate and extend or enlarge the public library of the city of Chicago; to acquire, by dedication, gift, lease, contract, purchase or condemnation, property and rights necessary or proper for library purposes; to make appropriations and tax levies and issue bonds for such purposes; and to exercise any and all powers and rights, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, now vested in the board of directors of the library under the laws of the state relating to such libraries.

Nothing herein contained shall in any way affect the operation or administration of an act entitled, "An act to provide for the formation and disbursement of a public library employees' pension fund in cities having a population exceeding 100,000 inhabitants," approved May 12, 1905, as amended by act of June 3, 1907; provided, however, that the board of trustees of the pension fund shall hereafter consist of five members, two of whom shall be employees contributing to the fund and three of whom shall be appointed in such manner as the city council may, by ordinance, direct.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

The city council shall have full power to manage, control, maintain, operate and extend or enlarge the house of correction of the city of Chicago, to locate such house of correction, or branches thereof, within or outside the corporate limits of the city; to acquire, by dedication, gift, lease, contract, purchase, condemnation or otherwise, all such rights and property as may by the city council be deemed necessary or proper for house of correction purposes; to make appropriations and issue bonds for such purposes; to exercise any and all powers and rights, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, now vested in the board of inspectors of such house of correction and the municipal and legislative authorities of cities under the laws of the state relating to such house of correction.

REFERENDUM.

Before the consolidation act goes into effect it must be submitted for approval to the legal voters of the city of Chicago and the legal voters of the several towns or townships, parks or park districts, or other local governments and authorities sought to be consolidated. If a majority of the legal voters of the city of Chicago voting thereon and a majority of the legal voters voting thereon of any two or more of said towns or townships, park or park districts, or other local governments and authorities, shall vote for the adoption of this act, it shall thereby and thereupon be adopted and be in force and effect. (Approved June 29, 1915.)

EXTRA SESSION OF LEGISLATURE. SUPREME COURT DECISION.

Owing to a decision of the state Supreme court declaring invalid many of the appropriations made by the general assembly, an extra session was called by Gov. Edward F. Dunne Nov. 19 to meet Nov. 22. The decision was made in consequence of an injunction suit brought by John B. Fergus, a taxpayer of Chicago, with the assistance of Fayette S. Munro, an attorney and former member of the legislature, the proceedings being backed by the Citizens' association of Chicago. Mr. Fergus and his associates secured a favorable decision from Judge James A. Creighton of the Circuit court in Springfield Aug. 28 and this, on appeal, was sustained in a large part by the state Supreme court in a decision announced Nov. 5. Chief Justice William M. Farmer then issued the following synopsis of the opinion written by Justice George A. Cooke:

The opinion holds:

Right to maintain suit (Craig, J., dissenting). That Fergus, as a taxpayer, under the authorities in this state, has a right to maintain the suit.

Validity of appropriation for pay of officers contained in omnibus bill (Farmer, C. J., dissenting).

That under the constitution, which requires that bills making appropriations for the pay of officers' salaries and for the pay of officers and members of the general assembly, shall contain no provision on any other subject, the appropriation for the salary of any officer of the state government which is contained in the omnibus bill is invalid. It affirms the decree of the Circuit court in its holding that the positions therein named are offices with the exception of one clerk in the inheritance tax office of the attorney-general and extra game wardens, which are held not to be offices. It also affirms the decree of the Circuit court in holding all other positions mentioned in the bill not to be offices, except three assistant attorneys-general in charge of inheritance tax office, the members of the board of veterinary examiners and a director of the state geological survey, which are held to be offices and the appropriations therefore invalid; that the appropriation for attorney for the state board of health and the appropriation for attorney for the industrial board are invalid for the reason that the statute provides that the state's attorneys of the various counties shall represent the state board of health in all prosecutions by it and for the further reasons given in discussing the question of validity of the appropriation to the insurance superintendent for legal services.

Appropriation to the governor for the maintenance of the executive mansion.

That this appropriation is valid and is not an increase in the salary or compensation provided for the governor.

Appropriation to lieutenant-governor for traveling expenses (Duncan, J., dissenting).

That this appropriation is valid, as it does not amount to an increase in the compensation of the lieutenant-governor during his term of office.

Appropriation to secretary of state for editing blue book.

That this appropriation is valid and is not an increase in the salary of the secretary of state.

Appropriation to superintendent of public instruction for conducting various examinations.

That this appropriation is valid and is not an increase in the salary of that officer.

Appropriation to secretary of state for expense of telephone calls by members of the general assembly.

That this appropriation is invalid for the reason that the constitution expressly limits the amount to be allowed to each member of the general assembly for all incidental expenses to $50.

Appropriation to state treasurer for refund of taxes.

That this appropriation is invalid for the reason that it does not appropriate any definite amount.

Appropriation to insurance superintendent for expenses of prosecution of violations of the insurance laws, for legal services and for traveling expenses of attorneys and court costs.

That the appropriation for expenses of prosecutions of violations of the insurance laws is valid and for a proper object.

That the appropriation for legal services and for traveling expenses of attorneys and court costs is invalid for the reason that the duties therein attempted to be compensated for devolve upon the office of the attorney-general and not upon the office of insurance superintendent.

Appropriation to rivers and lakes commission for prosecutions.

That this appropriation is valid and for a proper purpose.

Appropriation to the state board of pharmacy for the investigation and prosecution of the illegal sale of narcotic drugs.

That this appropriation is valid and for a proper purpose.

Appropriation for the expenses of commissions appointed by joint resolutions to sit after the final adjournment of the general assembly.

That this appropriation is invalid for the reason that neither the legislature nor either house thereof has the power to appoint a joint or separate committee to perform any function after the final adjournment of the legislature, and that as any expenses which might be incurred by any such committee would merely constitute a liability or indebtedness of the members thereof as individuals, the appropriation is invalid.

The effect of the governor's veto of a part of an item.

That the action of the governor in attempting to veto a part of an item, either by vetoing the words "per annum" or by disapproving of a specified portion of an item appropriated, is a nullity and does not have the effect of vetoing either a portion or the whole of the items referred to in the veto message. Such items are each of them valid appropriations despite the attempted veto of the governor.

The legislature closed its extra session Dec. 1 and took a recess until Feb. 23, 1916, the purpose of the recess being, it was said, to be ready for another session in case another emergency should arise through a Supreme court decision or otherwise.

The bills correctly creating state offices and making the necessary appropriations therefor, including back pay from July 1, 1915, made necessary by the Supreme court opinion, with the single exception of the office of secretary of the state civil service commission, went through. The bill transferring to the control of the attorney-general all appointive attorneyships heretofore maintained by separate boards and departments was passed.

One of the Chicago bills, that authorizing the transfer of funds, following the expiration of the first fiscal quarter, but only within the original department to which the appropriation was made and then by a two-thirds vote of the city council, also was passed.

One of the board of local improvement bills from Chicago permitting limited borrowing from other municipal funds for the credit of certain local improvement districts, such as the 12th street widening or the Michigan boulevard link project, was passed without an emergency clause.

The bills re-creating the Illinois centennial celebration commission and the commission to investigate the operation of all public employees' pension funds and to pay for the expense entailed were passed; also the bill reappropriating an unexpended balance to the Illinois commission at the San Francisco exposition.

The Chicago bill which would have added a 1½ mill tax rate to the city, the 5 cent Cook county rate increase, and the bill to validate the city hall appropriation of $500,000, declared unconstitutional by the Supreme court in the Sergel case, were defeated.

All primary election amendment bills, including that reducing the number of registrations, that affecting the change of date of the general primaries and that to determine specifically the method of electing national convention delegates, failed of action.

The bill amending the Tice good roads bill, which would have permitted bond issues by townships, was beaten. This did not deal with the $2,000,000 Cook county bond issue matter.

The proposition to submit a constitutional amendment tending to permit the governor to slice legislative appropriations when the bills are submitted to him for approval failed.

SOUTH SHORE LAKE FRONT DEVELOPMENT.

March 30, 1912, a contract was entered into between the Illinois Central Railroad company and the south park commissioners to enable the park commissioners to carry out the development of the shore of Lake Michigan between Grant and Jackson parks, as proposed in the plan of Chicago, which plan was originated by the Commercial club of Chicago and committed by the city council to the Chicago plan commission for development.

The south shore plan enables the new Field Museum of Natural History to be located downtown, where it will be easily accessible to all, facing north on the new widened 12th street at its intersection with South Park avenue extended and overlooking Grant park. The necessary authority having been granted by the United States government on Oct. 19, 1912, work was begun on the breakwaters and the filling in of land east of the Illinois Central station for the early erection of the Field museum. The foundations of the new structure were laid in 1915.

The park plan provides for the creation of approximately 1,500 acres of park space along Chicago's lake front, beginning at Grant park in the center of the city, by the filling in, first, of a strip of shore land approximately 300 feet wide, facing the open lake, this strip to extend solidly to connect with Jackson park on the south. The strip is to be planted with trees and given informal landscape treatment, with flowers and shrubs growing throughout its extent. Along this shore will run a watercourse, approximately 500 feet wide, for small craft, for sailboats, motor boats, canoes and racing shells. Beyond the watercourse, built to protect it and provide safety and shelter to pleasure craft, will be an island, approximately 700 feet wide and extending from Grant to Jackson park, planted with trees, having a shore driveway and winding walks, and, under the proposed plan, providing frequent bathing beaches for the city's summer multitudes, as well as athletic grounds, baseball fields, running tracks, tennis courts, football fields, a stadium and a public gymnasium.

This agreement, made March 30, 1912, between the south park commissioners and the Illinois Central Railroad company, provides for the acquiring by the park commissioners of the riparian rights attaching to the land lying between Grant and Jackson parks; for the establishment of a specified permanent boundary line dividing the railroad property from the submerged lands to be acquired by the park commissioners; for the construction of specified viaducts over the railroad tracks; for the extension of South Park avenue north over the railroad tracks to connect with Grant park at 12th street; for the removal of the 12th street station to land south of the new widened 12th street extended to the lake shore; for the transfer of all land east of Michigan avenue and north of 12th street, as far as the present southern boundary of Grant park, to the park commissioners for park purposes; for the transfer to the railroad company of certain specified lands for right of way and for various other minor agreed changes in present conditions. This agreement was ratified, in accordance with law, by Judge Lockwood Honore of the Circuit court July 10, 1912.

The contract was modified by a supplemental agreement, signed June 26, 1912, which provides for a reduction in the land granted the railroad for right of way; for depression of roadbed; for prohibition of buildings (except switch towers and platform passenger stations) upon the right of way between 29th and 51st streets, in order to permit an unobstructed view of the lake; for a prohibition upon the use of the additional right of way until the railroad company arranges for the operating of four tracks by motive power other than steam (which is designed to encourage the electrification of the road); for specified viaducts over right of way; for widening and relocation of Indiana avenue and for specified widening of Michigan avenue between 12th and 13th streets.

Objections were made by army engineers to the building of a city park from Grant park to Jackson park on the ground that it would interfere with the development of harbor facilities, and but little progress was made in 1913. In November of that year a delegation of citizens visited the war department and obtained the consent of Secretary Garrison to proceed with the improvement, subject to certain conditions. These were that there should be no further filling in from Randolph to 12th street until an outer breakwater inclosing a new harbor has been provided for by congress and built; that from 12th street to 16th street there should be no further filling in other than that under way for the Field museum and that as to the stretch between 16th and 50th streets legal steps should be taken to reserve to the proper authorities the right to construct harbor facilities if such should be demanded.

Dec. 18, 1913, the secretary of war announced that he would issue no permit for the improvement of the lake front until he received an absolute guaranty that the park extension would not interfere with any future project for a commercial harbor on the south shore. Nothing was accomplished in 1914, although an effort was made to have congress pass a bill to permit the improvement. No agreement could be reached between the city officials and the men responsible for the proposed measure, which was allowed to die. In 1915 it was arranged to clear up the situation by having the state legislature pass two bills, one permitting park boards to convey the title of submerged lands to the city and the other permitting the city to convey the title to similar lands to park boards. These bills were passed and were substantially as follows:

CONVEYANCE TO CITY.

"Any park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners which has heretofore acquired or shall hereafter acquire the title to any lands adjacent to or adjoining upon or penetrating into any public waters, in this state, or to the submerged land and bed of such public waters, or any part thereof, or to any riparian or other rights, may grant, convey or release any of such lands or rights to any city or village authorized to acquire, own, construct, maintain and operate in, over and upon the public waters bordering thereon, harbors, canals, slips, wharves, docks, levees, piers, quay walls, breakwaters and harbor structures, facilities, connections and improvements, for such purposes or any of them. Any such park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners may grant, convey or release to any such city or village the right to construct and maintain roadways and any other appropriate approaches to or connections with any harbor or harbor utility or appurtenance of such city or village, over and across any lands and property of such park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners. Provided, nothing in this act contained shall be construed to vest any authority or right for the conveyance of lands, submerged or otherwise, for any other use or purpose than strictly for state, municipal or federal use or purposes." (Approved June 29, 1915.)

RELEASE TO PARK COMMISSIONERS.

"Any city, town or village which has heretofore acquired or shall hereafter acquire control over any lands bordering upon any public waters in this state, and the riparian rights appurtenant thereto, may grant, convey or release any of such lands or rights for park purposes to any park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners having control of any park within the territorial limits of such city, town or village, and may make agreements with any such park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners for the reclamation by such park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners for park purposes of submerged lands under the public water adjacent to the lands controlled by such city, town or village. Provided, however, that no such park commissioners, park board or board of park commissioners may grant, convey, lease or release any lands so acquired or the riparian rights appurtenant thereto to any private person or corporation." (Approved June 29, 1915.)

While many conferences were held by persons representing the south park board, the city council, the Illinois Central and others interested, no agreement as to carrying out the proposed improvement had been reached up to Dec. 1, 1915.

LABOR MEN, FIRMS AND CONTRACTORS INDICTED.

Indictments were returned April 27, 1915, by a United States grand jury sitting in Chicago against eighteen labor union officials in the building trades, forty-one contractors and forty-one corporations and firms for alleged violation of the antitrust law. The labor union officials were charged with conspiracy to aid the contractors in keeping outside contractors and material from the Chicago field by violence and strike threats. The contractors were accused of conspiring to fix prices of electrical and lighting fixtures, to keep material made in other cities out of the Chicago market and to maintain contracts with unions to manipulate a monopoly. Eight indictments were returned separating the defendants into eight groups and specifying the charges in each particular offense.

Dec. 3 the November grand jury returned indictments against fifty-four men, comprising business agents and others connected with building trades unions, saloonkeepers and dealers in certain building supplies. The charges were extortion, conspiracy and malicious mischief.

ELECTRIFICATION AND AIR POLLUTION.

"Electrification," says the committee in its report, "has been proposed as a means in smoke abatement. The extent to which the elimination of the steam locomotive and the establishment of electric operation would reduce the pollution of the atmosphere of the city may be summarized as follows:

"1. The amount of visible smoke discharged into the atmosphere of Chicago would be reduced 20 per cent.

"2. The amount of solid constituents of smoke (soot, ash and fuel particles) discharged into the atmosphere of Chicago would be reduced 5 per cent.

"3. The amount of dust and dirt in the atmosphere of Chicago, arising from all sources, would be reduced 4 per cent.

"4. The volume of gaseous products of combustion discharged into the atmosphere of Chicago would be reduced 5 per cent."

PRODUCERS OF SMOKE.

The committee found that high pressure steam stationary power and heating plants produced 45 per cent of the visible smoke and 19 per cent of soot and dust; furnaces for metallurgical, manufacturing and allied processes, 29 per cent of smoke and 64 per cent of soot and dust; steam locomotives, 22 per cent of smoke and 8 per cent of soot and dust and low pressure steam and other stationary heating plants 4 per cent of smoke and 9 per cent of soot and dust. The committee found smoke was not the only source of air pollution in Chicago. It specified the following as dust producing sources and agencies: Unimproved streets and alleys, bare ground areas, including playgrounds, back yards and roofs, coal yards and the handling of crushed stone, lime, sand, cement, brick, tile, gravel and excavated material; building operations, particularly house wrecking; street construction and repair; abrasion of street and sidewalk surfaces, manufacturing operations, burning of waste, etc., and dry sweeping of streets.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS.

The committee's recommendations in the line of securing for the people of Chicago a clearer and cleaner atmosphere are as follows:

1. That there be created by the city a permanent pure air commission, the membership of which shall be made up of persons possessing high technical qualifications.

2. That financial support be placed at the command of the commission, which shall be sufficient adequately to provide for the organization and development of investigations of a highly scientific character.

3. That the commission be empowered to investigate all sources of air pollution, to determine, by experiment or otherwise, the most effective means for mitigating or eliminating such pollution, and that, so far as practicable, it be invested with power to enforce obedience to its decisions.

4. That no material shall be employed in paving without the consent of the commission, to the end that dust-creating pavements may be abolished.

5. That the paving and cleaning of alleys and other highways shall be subject to the supervision of the commission.

6. That the commission shall have power to require that the wrecking and erection of buildings shall proceed by methods which will protect the air from all unnecessary pollution.

7. That the commission shall have the power to require roofs to be cleaned and other minor sources of air pollution to be abated.

8. That new installations of boiler and other furnaces be permitted only as licensed by the commission, which shall have power, under reasonable rules, to determine the character of the installations.

9. That the commission be charged with the duty of investigating present practice in the construction and operation of domestic furnaces, with a view to so perfecting such practice that fuels now used may be burned without objectionable air pollution, or to so changing the character of present fuels as to accomplish the same result.

10. That the commission be charged with the duty of investigating the construction and operation of metallurgical and high pressure steam boiler furnaces, with a view to eliminating, so far as practicable, the air pollution for which such furnaces are responsible, and that it formulate and enforce regulations under which such furnaces shall hereafter be constructed and operated.

11. That the commission be charged with the duty of investigating the pollution of the air by railroad locomotives, by steamboats and by other transportation agencies making use of movable engines, of devising methods of abating air pollution from these sources, and of enforcing such provisions for the suppression of air pollution as may be found necessary.

The committee making the report was composed of the following: Jesse Holdom, chairman; Frederick H. Rawson, secretary; John J. Bernet, Paul P. Bird, Joseph H. DeFezes, Charles L. Dering, Thomas E. Donnelly, Howard Elting, Dr. William A. Evans, Milton J. Foreman, William A. Gardner, William F. M. Goss, Ernest B. Graham, Richard C. Hall, Howard G. Hetzler, Hale Holden, Eugene U. BOULEVARD CONNECTING LINK PROJECT.

DOUBLE DECKED BASCULE BRIDGE TO CONNECT NORTH AND SOUTH SIDE BOULEVARDS.

Plans for properly connecting the south and north side boulevard systems of Chicago by means of widening Michigan avenue and a new bridge over the river began to be studied seriously in 1905 by committees of various public bodies, such as the city council, real estate boards, park boards and by architects and other private individuals. In 1906, 1907 and 1908 Daniel H. Burnham and Edward H. Bennett, architects, working under the direction of the Commercial club, prepared the famous "Plan of Chicago," of which one feature was the Michigan avenue improvement project. Nov. 1, 1909, the Chicago Plan commission, representing the official administration and the public generally, was created by the city council in response to an official request from Mayor Fred A. Busse, who appointed its members. It held its first meeting Nov. 4 in that year and elected Charles H. Wacker as president. The duty of the commission was to carry out as far as practicable from time to time the ideas formulated in the Commercial club, or as it is often called, the Burnham plan.

Study of the Michigan avenue project was begun at once by the commission and after a long series of meetings and conferences it adopted, July 10, 1911, a plan which was presented two days later to the board of local improvements for its consideration. June 2, 1913, that body submitted to the city council an ordinance for carrying the plan into effect and July 14 the ordinance was passed. Some of the property owners affected began proceedings attacking the validity of the ordinance and in December the State Supreme court made a ruling in which it declared that the ordinance was invalid because of faulty description of land involved in the project. A revised ordinance, correcting the errors pointed out by the court, was introduced in the council and finally passed by that body March 23, 1914, without opposition. At the election of Nov. 3, 1914, the people of Chicago approved a proposition to issue bonds in the sum of $3,800,000 for paying that part of the cost chargeable to the city for the boulevard link.

The ordinance as passed calls for the improvement of a thoroughfare extending from Randolph street northward along Michigan avenue, over the river, thence over private property and along Pine street and Lincoln parkway to Chicago avenue. Michigan avenue is to be widened to 127.5 feet and that part of the new thoroughfare north of the river is to be 141 feet wide. The improvement is to consist of a two-level roadway comprising an upper level extending the entire distance between Randolph street and Chicago avenue and supported between Lake street and Grand avenue upon an elevated steel and concrete structure, and a lower level extending from Lake street to Grand avenue. The bridge is to be double decked and of the bascule type, the upper level connecting the parts of the upper level of the thoroughfare and the lower level connecting the portions of the lower level of the thoroughfare north and south of the river. The upper level of the bridge is to be ninety feet wide and the lower level sixty feet. The structure is to have a clear span between the abutments of 220 feet. The upper level is to be used by pleasure vehicles and the lower level is to carry heavy traffic.

The total cost of the entire improvement, including land to be taken, is estimated at about $7,000,000. The cost of the bridge, elevated structure, walls and excavations, pavements, lighting and bridge machinery alone, without land damages, is estimated at $2,298,247. The greater part of the cost will be met by assessments on the property benefited.

Appraisal of the land and buildings to be taken in whole or in part for the improvement was completed in September, 1915, and it was announced that fifty-two holders of real estate would receive $4,942,088 as awards from the city. When the awards have been confirmed by the County court the actual construction of the boulevard link will begin.

The valuation since 1875 is the equalized valuation fixed by the state board of equalization. From 1867 to 1875 the valuation was made by the city for the city tax. From 1893 to 1903, inclusive, the assessed value was one-fifth of the actual value. In 1909 the rate was fixed at one-third. The total valuation includes capital stock and railroads.

STATUE OF THE REPUBLIC FOR JACKSON PARK.

Through the action of nine of the original directors of the World's Columbian Exposition directors an exact duplicate of the statue of the Republic or Goddess of Liberty, which stood before the administration building during the World's Fair in 1893, will be made by the sculptor who made the original, Daniel C. French, and will be placed on the exact spot it originally occupied in Jackson park. At the meeting of the directors the following were present: Harlow N. Higginbotham, president; Charles L. Hutchinson, Victor F. Lawson, Arthur Dixon, Washington Porter, Charles H. Wacker, John P. Hopkins, Mark L. Crawford, Adolph Nathan and H. O. Edmonds, secretary.

These directors voted to dissolve the corporation and to contribute $47,000 remaining assets toward a fund for the making of a duplicate of the statue of the Republic. The fund, which represents uncalled for dividends, with interest, will go to the Art Institute to be administered under the terms of the Ferguson fund created by the will of the late Benjamin F. Ferguson for the erection of statues and memorials on the boulevards, streets and in the parks of the city.

The directors of the Ferguson fund agreed to furnish the rest of the money necessary for the making of the statue and also to pay to any stockholder of the World's Columbian Exposition corporation, upon proof, any moneys due as dividends which have not been paid.

The statue as it stood on the exposition grounds was sixty-five feet in height, the pedestal not included. The pose was firm and majestic; the drapery chaste and severe; the expression that of confident power and benign purpose. The arms were uplifted with easy grace, the right hand holding aloft a globe on which perched the American eagle, the left grasping a staff crowned with a liberty cap. The statue was gilded. The head was encircled by a crown, the jewels of which were electric lights.

REVENUE FROM ILLINOIS CENTRAL.

Since March 24, 1855, the Illinois Central Railroad company, in accordance with the terms of its charter, accepted March 15, 1851, has been paying into the Illinois state treasury semiannually a certain percentage of the gross receipts from its charter lines. This percentage up to 1857 was 5 and since then has been 7. The total amount paid by the road to the state up to April 30, 1912, was $31,502,713.29. The gross receipts and the semiannual payments to the state since April 30, 1905, have been:

CHICAGO SALOONS CLOSED ON SUNDAY.

Monday evening, Oct. 4, 1915, Mayor William Hale Thompson read the following order at the session of the city council:

"I have recently received communications from citizens of Chicago that liquor is sold in this city on Sunday in violation of the state law. I referred these communications to the corporation counsel for an opinion as to what is the law in regard thereto. He advises me that the state law provides that 'whoever keeps open any tipping house or place where liquor is sold or given away upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall be fined not exceeding $200,' and that the city ordinance permitting, under certain restrictions, saloons or drumshops to remain open on Sunday does not and cannot nullify the state law. This being the law, as I am advised, and it being my duty as mayor to take care, so far as lies within my power, that the law is faithfully executed in the city, I hereby direct that saloons or drumshops shall comply with the law and close on Sunday. And the city collector is hereby ordered immediately to notify in writing all persons to whom he has issued licenses for saloons or drumshops that such persons must comply with the requirements of the state law. Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON.

The order went into effect Oct. 10.

NEW Y. M. C. A. HOTEL IN CHICAGO.

One of the notable buildings in Chicago nearing completion at the end of 1915 was the new Young Men's Christian Association hotel at 818-826 Wabash avenue. It is nineteen stories high and cost $1,100,000. The hotel is designed as a place that will surround with helpful influences transients and young men coming to Chicago for the first time.

NEW UNION RAILWAY STATION.

Ordinances for a new union passenger station and new freight terminals on the west side were passed by the city council March 23, 1914, after many months of investigation and consideration. Under the ordinances the union passenger station, to be occupied by the Pennsylvania, Burlington, Alton and St. Paul railroads, is to be located on the block bounded by Canal, Adams, Clinton and Jackson streets. Under Canal street there will be a subway connecting a large concourse on the east of that thoroughfare with the station. Sixteen passenger tracks will lead to the south and ten to the north. This part of the passenger terminal will reach practically from Carroll avenue on the north to 12th street on the south. The Pennsylvania freighthouses will be located immediately north of 12th street and extend to Taylor street, while the Burlington freighthouses will be between Harrison and Taylor streets and near Canal street. In exchange for rights in certain streets the railroads agreed to make improvements as follows:

Improvements.	Cost.
Viaduct, Monroe street.....	$100,000
Viaduct, 12th street.....	270,000
Viaduct, Congress street.....	300,000
Viaducts, 14th and 16th streets.....	400,000
Viaducts, Taylor, Polk, Harrison, Van Buren, Jackson, Adams, Madison, Randolph and Lake streets.....	1,760,000
Elevated roadway, Canal and Kinzie streets	650,000

Revamping of Canal street, Washington to 12th street.....$2,375,000

Total 5,855,000

To fit in with these improvements the city agreed to the following improvements at the costs estimated:

Bridge, Monroe street.....	$500,000
Double decked bridge, Kinzie street....	600,000
Land to widen Canal street to 100 feet..	760,753

Total 1,860,753

In addition, the roads agreed to pay $1,511,000 in cash compensation.

The total cost to the railroads of the improvements under the terminal ordinances was estimated at $65,000,000, exclusive of money previously paid for land.

Feb. 19, 1915, the city council passed an ordinance providing for the vacation of certain streets and alleys in connection with the Baltimore & Ohio freight terminal ordinance, making it possible for that road to vacate part of its old yards, which are needed for the new union terminal. The city, in payment for the streets and alleys surrendered to the railroad company, received $111,304.77.

Work on the union terminal was begun Feb. 22, 1915. It consisted of preparing for the new freighthouses of the Pennsylvania company. Later, work was started on some of the street changes made necessary by the plans.

INHERITANCE TAX IN ILLINOIS.

The Illinois law taxing gifts, legacies and inheritances was passed by the legislature in 1895 and amended in 1901. Its constitutionality was contested, but the United States Supreme court in a decision rendered Jan. 19, 1903, held it to be valid.

Under the provisions of this law all property, real, personal and mixed, which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of the state from any resident of the state or any one whose property is in this state to any person or persons is subject to a tax at the following rates: When the beneficial interests to any property or income therefrom shall pass to any father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, wife or widow of the son or the husband of the daughter, or any adopted child or children, or to any lineal descendant born in lawful wedlock, the rate of tax shall be $1 on every $100 of the clear market value of such property received by each person and at the same rate for any less amount, provided that any estate which may be valued at less than $20,000 shall not be subject to any such tax; and the tax is to be levied in the above cases only upon the excess of $20,000 received by each person.

When the property passes to any uncle, aunt, niece, nephew or any lineal descendant of the same the rate shall be $2 on every $100 in excess of $2,000.

In all other cases the rate shall be as follows: On each and every $100 of the clear market value of all property and at the same rate for any less amount: On all estates of $10,000 and less, $3; on all estates of over $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, $4; on all estates over $20,000 and not exceeding $50,000, $5, and on all estates over $50,000, $6; provided, that an estate in the above case which may be valued at a less sum than $500 shall not be subject to any tax.

LA SALLE STREET BANK CASES.

Charles B. Munday was found guilty Nov. 19, 1915, in the Circuit court of Grundy county, Illinois, of criminal conspiracy in connection with the failure of the LaSalle Street Trust and Savings bank in Chicago June 12, 1914. The jury fixed the punishment at five years in the penitentiary. Investigations made soon after the failure of the bank led to the indictment of William Lorimer, Charles B. Munday, Harry W. Huttig and a number of others, Oct. 21, 1914. The three named were charged with conspiracy and it was the intention to try them at the same time, but Munday secured a change of venue to Grundy county and the trial began before Judge Samuel C. Stough in Morris, Sept. 27, 1915. The case was prosecuted by State's Attorney Macley Hayne of Cook county, assisted by the state's attorney of Grundy county, Frank H. Hayes. It was shown that at the time the bank failed there was $2,484,000 in Lorimer-Munday-Huttig paper in the institution on which the receiver had been able to collect only $74,000.

PROPOSED PASSENGER SUBWAY SYSTEM FOR CHICAGO.

The harbor and subway commission and the subcommittee of the council committee on local transportation submitted a joint report Sept. 10, 1912, on a "comprehensive system of subways which shall extend into the outlying districts and which shall be designed to remedy the existing traction evils of the city of Chicago." The general plan recommended was a high level subway as close as possible to the surface of the streets and avoiding all grade crossings. The power system contemplated comprised alternating current generation and distribution and direct current operation of motors. The estimates were based on a third rail direct current system of conductors. The capacity of the subways outlined in the report was estimated at 180,000 seats per hour.

PROPOSED ROUTES.

Following were the routes recommended:

North to South Side—Beginning at Lawrence avenue and Broadway, a two track subway in Broadway to Irving Park boulevard and Halsted street; south in Halsted to Fullerton avenue.

Beginning at Lawrence and Lincoln avenues, a two track subway in Lincoln avenue to Halsted street and Fullerton avenue.

The two subways from the north joining at Halsted street and Fullerton avenue are continued as a four track subway southeast in Lincoln avenue to Clark street; south in Clark street to some point just north of the river (subject to further engineering investigation). Thence a two track subway for express trains south in Clark street to Polk street or some street farther south; east in Polk street or some other street to State street; south in State street in a four track subway to 55th street. A two track subway east in 55th street to Cottage Grove avenue; south in Cottage Grove avenue to 79th street. Transfers can be made from this subway at Fullerton avenue to the Halsted street subway; at Clark and Madison streets to the Madison street subway; at Harrison and Clark streets to the southwest subway.

North Side to Southwest Side—Two of the four tracks from the North Clark street subway continue in a two track subway east from Clark street to State street; thence south in State street to Harrison street; west in a two track subway in Harrison street to Halsted street and Blue Island avenue; thence continuing southwest in Blue Island avenue to 22d street and Ashland avenue; west in 22d street to Marshall boulevard; south in Marshall boulevard to 26th street; west in 26th street to South Crawford avenue. Transfers can be made from the subway at Fullerton avenue to the Halsted street subway, at State street to the "Northwest Side to South Side" subways, at Halsted and Harrison streets to Halsted street subway.

Northwest Side to South Side—Beginning at Elston and Kedzie avenues, a two track subway in Elston avenue southeast to Belmont and California avenues; south in California avenue to Milwaukee avenue; southeast in Milwaukee avenue to Desplaines or Canal street. Continuing south in Desplaines or Canal street to Randolph street; east in Randolph street to State street; south in State street in the four track subway to 55th street and State street; thence west in 55th street in a two track subway to Western avenue. Transfers can be made from the subway at Milwaukee avenue and Halsted street to the Halsted street subway; at State street to the "North Side to Southwest Side" subway; at 55th street and Halsted street to Halsted street subway.

A two track subway in Armitage avenue from North Crawford avenue to Milwaukee avenue, connecting with the Elston-Milwaukee avenue line. Halsted Street—Beginning at the junction of the Lincoln avenue and Broadway lines at Fullerton avenue, a two track subway in Halsted street to 79th street. Transfers can be made from this subway at Fullerton avenue to the "North Side to South Side" and the "North Side to Southwest Side" subways; at Milwaukee avenue to the "Northwest Side to South Side" subway; at Harrison street to the "North Side to Southwest Side" subways; at 55th street to the "Northwest Side to South Side" subway. Madison Street—Beginning at South Clark street, a two track subway in Madison street to Crawford avenue. Transfers can be made from the subway at Halsted street to the Halsted street subway; at Clark and Madison streets to the "North Side to South Side" subway. This subway may eventually be extended south in Clark street and other streets to serve the southwestern part of the city.

ESTIMATED COST OF SUBWAYS.

North side to Lawrence avenue.....	$20,123,000
South side to 79th street.....	25,775,000
West side to Crawford avenue.....	31,049,000
Halsted street.....	19,307,000

Estimated cost of equipment.....	34,844,000

-------------	-------------

The equipment will be furnished by the operating company.

Two plans for financing the project were suggested. One was to have the city build the subways out of the proceeds of legalized Mueller certificates and the other to have them built by private capital under such conditions as would insure absolute municipal control. It was subsequently ascertained that the scheme could not be financed by the issuance of Mueller certificates.

The joint report was signed by John Ericson, James J. Reynolds and E. C. Shankland of the harbor and subway commission and by Aldermen Eugene Block (chairman), John A. Richert, Patrick J. Carr, William F. Schultz, William J. Healy, Henry D. Captain and Charles Twigg, subcommittee of the council committee on local transportation.

ARNOLD SUBWAY PLAN.

Little or no progress was made with the subway project in 1913, but the matter was taken up by the council transportation committee in the fall and expert advice was sought. A plan submitted by Bion J. Arnold received favorable consideration from the committee. He recommended that the city proceed to the construction of two initial subways for the use of the surface lines. The north and south route, he said, should be under Clark street from North avenue to 22d street. For the east and west bores he outlined a "loop back" in the downtown section, entering it by way of the Washington street tunnel, proceeding east to Michigan avenue and leaving the loop by the Van Buren street tunnel, and vice versa.

He estimated the first of these routes to cost $9,600,000 and the second $4,900,000, a total of $14,500,000.

No bids having been received for the construction of the $130,000,000 comprehensive system of subways favored by Mayor Harrison, the members of the harbor and subway commission appointed in 1911 resigned in a body Jan. 7, 1914, on the ground that there was nothing further for them to do. For the completion of work in connection with the north side municipal pier the commission was continued, but changed so as to include the city comptroller, commissioner of public works and E. C. Shankland, who was made chairman.

Nothing was accomplished in 1915, though consideration of the subject was resumed by the council local transportation committee in November.

FREIGHT TUNNELS UNDER CHICAGO.

Underlying nearly all the streets in the central business section of Chicago are sixty miles of tunnels connecting the freight terminals of the railroads with commercial houses. The tunnels are provided with narrow-gauge (2 ft.) electric railroads equipped with electric locomotives and steel cars. These are used chiefly in transporting goods to and from railroad freight yards and in carrying coal to business houses. Excavated and waste material from new buildings is removed through the tunnels and disposed of, permitting the work of construction to go on without interruption. In 1914 the Chicago Utilities company, which now owns the tunnel system, had in operation 117 electric motors and 3,000 coal, freight and other cars. In addition it had charge of some 24,000 telephones.

The original franchise for the tunnel system was granted Feb. 20, 1899, to the Illinois Telephone and Telegraph company, which was organized in 1898 by A. G. Wheeler and associates for the purpose of establishing an independent telephone system. By an amendatory ordinance granted July 15, 1903, the company was given the right to construct and operate a subway system for the transportation of mail matter, newspapers, packages and freight generally. The tunnels are 19 feet below city datum or 33 feet below the surface of the streets, the trunk line tunnels being limited in size to 12 feet 9 inches in width by 14 feet in height, and the smaller ones to 6 feet in width and 7 feet 6 inches in height. Part of the tunnel system was put into operation Aug. 15, 1906, but the whole of it was not in use until Sept. 1, 1907.

The Illinois Telephone and Telegraph company was succeeded in October, 1903, by the Illinois Tunnel company, which was followed in November, 1904, by the Chicago Subway company. The property of the Subway company and underlying concerns was acquired in April, 1912, by the Chicago Utilities company, the authorized capital stock of which is $53,000,000.

WILLETT

TEAMING

THE A. T. WILLETT COMPANY began in 1868 with twenty horses. The one horse two wheel dray was the popular wagon of that time. Some of our first customers whom early settlers will recall were McKinley-Gilchrist, C. T. Reynolds & Co., Davis Bros., H. A. & H. D. Bogardus, Mauran Wright & Co., and R. B. Boak & Co. Of this old bunch only R. B. Boak & Co. and the Willett Co. still survive.

To-day we operate three hundred teams and motor trucks. A few of our customers are Steele-Wedeles Co., Montgomery Ward & Co., International Paper Co., The Tribune, James S. Kirk & Co., Procter & Gamble Co., W. F. McLaughlin & Co. and The Daily News.

One reason for our success is the personal loyalty we feel for our customers. Our customers are part of our gang and in labor troubles we stick with them to the finish.

The service of the Willett Company has never failed to any customer for a single hour since 1868.
